GUIDE TO AMERICAN HISTORY

GUIDE TO AMERICAN HISTORY

P R E F A C E .

THIRTEEN years' experience in the teaching of American history to college and graduate students has led to the preparation of this book. Some of the material has been printed in tentative form for the use of our own classes ; for instance, the General Readings (Part I, § 56) and the Topical References (Parts II and III) are revised and enlarged from lists which have been tested in everyday use. Since American history is so widely taught, we have hoped that other teachers and other students might find available these lists of references, and also some suggestions on methods of teaching, derived from actual experience in Harvard University, or known to work successfully in other colleges or secondary schools.

In Part I we have therefore placed in type a body of information for teachers, students, readers, and librarians. This includes a set of lists of related books, which may serve investigators, purchasers of libraries, instructors, and workers ; among them are selected lists of state, town, county, and city histories ; national, colonial, state, and local records and statutes ; biographies, writings of statesmen, reminiscences, newspapers, and periodicals ; books of travel, novels, poems, and other illustrative matter. References to most of these books, and to many others of equal value, will be found under the appropriate topics in Parts II and III. The rest of Part I is devoted to descriptions of proved methods of class exercises, of reading history, of written work, and of oral and written tests.

No one can be better aware than the authors of the inadequacy of this work ; the immense mass of rich material on American history cannot be condensed into a single volume ; and doubtless much has been omitted that ought to go in, or inserted that might well be left out. It is to be remembered, however, that the plan of the work does not admit of complete bibliographical information on any topic. It has been our endeavor to select out of the available material that likely to be most immediately useful to the searcher into political, social, constitutional, and economic history. For the antiquarian and the genealogist we have not been able to provide. We have, however, noted as many as possible of the more elaborate bibliographies, to serve as guides to more complete information; and we have ventured to save space in some cases by referring to bibliographies or other material previously prepared by the same hands.

Included in the Index is an alphabetical list by authors of all the works to which reference is made; but only that page is entered on which the book is first mentioned. An asterisk indicates that the title is printed in full, with place and date of publication.

All the titles and references and index entries have been carefully verified; but errors have doubtless crept in, and the authors will be grateful for any indication of mistakes, and for any suggestions how the Guide may be made more useful to those interested in our country's history.

Acknowledgments to authors of serviceable books stand on every page; but we cannot send this volume to press without stating our peculiar obligations to our friend and master, Dr. Justin Winsor, the profound scholar whose researches have opened up the rich mines of literature in American history, and whose greatest work, the Narrative and Critical History of America, has been freely drawn upon throughout our labors.

GUIDE TO AMERICAN HISTORY.

PART I.

METHODS AND MATERIALS.

I. THE SUBJECT MATTER.

§ 1. The Standing of American History.

It is only within the last few years that American history has been regarded by educators either as a liberal study or as a serious subject deserving scientific treatment. This is due to the fact that the earlier books on this theme were designed to commemorate the supposed deeds of some ancestor, or to arouse the patriotism of American youth by the relation of stories of doubtful historical foundation, and of very questionable value from an ethical point of view. Probably the works of the notorious Mason L. Weems did much to degrade the taste for real historical information, and to place an undue value on the anecdotal side of history. At all events, it was not until Jared Sparks began his important labors in 1818 that scholars undertook the study of the history of the English race in America with a serious spirit; the earlier work of Abiel Holmes seems to have had slight influence on the study of history, although in itself it is a most important and accurate book.

Following Sparks there came into existence a race of historical writers whose names must always be held in grateful remembrance, even though their works have been largely superseded. Of them may be mentioned Pitkin, George Bancroft, Irving, Prescott, and Tucker. All these authors, with the exception of Irving and Prescott, essayed to write a more or less complete history of the country in narrative form. Later another cycle of historical writers began their labors, of whom the best known, perhaps, are John Fiske, Schouler, McMaster, Henry Adams, and Von Holst, all of whom have rewritten portions of the history of the United States with the aid of new material.

Side by side with these writers on the general subject, the investigators in more limited fields have been pursuing their researches. Among the foremost of these men may be mentioned Parkman, Winsor, Deane, and Charles Francis Adams. The monographic form has proved attractive, also, to the minor writers; and the publications of the historical societies, and of many universities, contain a vast mass of historical papers, some of them of great importance to the student. During the same time historical material has been accumulated in public repositories and in private collections, while states, municipalities, universities, and societies have vied with one another in their efforts to place this material in the safer and more accessible form of printed books. The materials for the student of American history may be said, therefore, to have been thus established on a permanent and scientific basis.

The teaching of American history has advanced more slowly. Long confined even in the higher institutions to juiceless textbooks, it has slowly come to include the reading of standard authors, at least as far down as the secondary schools; and in the college this reading has sometimes been supplemented by practical exercises of various kinds. The universities now have a body of advanced students in history who are receiving systematic training in the study, teaching, and investigation of their subject, and are making contributions to historical literature. Thus the seed of scientific treatment of history has begun to germinate throughout the system of American education; and the universities are supplying trained teachers for schools and colleges as well as for their own needs.

At the same time efforts are making to enlarge the means of information, both by preparing better secondary books, and by opening up the sources to make them available not only to college students, but to the reader and solitary student. In new libraries, small and great, American history is always well represented. The habit of historical reading is everywhere encouraged; and the liberality of those in control of the larger public and private collections places the sources of our history at the disposal of the earnest student.

The subject of American history is, therefore, widely accepted by school committees and college trustees, by teachers and by thinking people outside of schools and colleges, as a proper discipline and source of pleasure. The material is, however, still much disorganized, and methods of dealing with it are in many places crude and unformed. To open up highways and footpaths into this literature, and thus to contribute to sound learning and accurate judgment of cause and effect, is the purpose of this work.

§ 2. The Extent of American History.

The term "American history" demands a word of explanation. Using the phrase in its broadest sense it would mean an account of everything that has ever happened within the Western Hemisphere. But such a definition is impossible, both on account of the bulk of materials, and because of different degrees of intrinsic importance of the various elements which necessarily go to make up such a history. In American history, as in other fields, the historical writer attempts to set forth the vital elements of the life of the people, so far as he has material for judging. Applying this criterion, we can hardly speak of American history earlier than the discovery by Columbus, because the material is too scanty for anything more than an imperfect notion of feeble native communities and a few far-away suggestions of earlier discoverers. Of human characters, of political devices, of economic development, of literature, and of religion, in America before Columbus, we can know almost nothing; and what we do know has scanty instruction for us.

We must also throw out of the effective field of American history almost the whole continent of South America, because the life of the natives there, except in Peru, possesses little interest; and because the Latin-Americans have made no significant contribution to the world's stock of social and political experience.

In the northern continent, where five European nations strove against each other to establish colonies, only three of them kept their hold for any considerable length of time; of these Spain and France were the feebler colonizers and were gradually driven out by men of English race. The English acquired the dominant power in that part of the Americas where the physiographical conditions were best suited to a nation's growth. To that dominance succeeded the United States. In the English colonies and in the United States, which included most of them, have been developed and tested, and sent out to the rest of the world, principles of popular government which have altered the government of all nations having a western civilization. The Spanish-American States have during the last century made few advances. It is not boastful, therefore, to say that American history is principally the story of the development of the United States of America, from the earliest English settlements; for the chief service America has rendered to the human race is the development of the great federal republic.

§ 3. Connection with the History of Other Countries.

American history, however, cannot be treated as a separate incident or as an independent movement; in its roots and in its growth, the New World is a part of the Old World. It is a fundamental mistake to look upon modern Europeans as more directly than Americans the descendants of mediæval Europeans; the most superficial sketch of American history must take into account the nations out of which our civilization has sprung, and especially England and the English political system. The institutions of the ancestors of the colonists had their roots in the feudal system, the mediæval church, and even in traditions of the Roman law and administration. But the English nation had flourished in an air of freedom and had developed those ideas of free government which the English colonists brought with them, and which are the common inheritance of all the members of the Anglo-Saxon race.

Still, there must be drawn the line between the origin and predisposing causes of colonization and its results. In reading the history of the United States, we cannot go back in detail to Tacitus and the ancient Germans. Perhaps the most reasonable starting point of American history is a brief account of the social, political, and religious conditions of the colonizing countries, and particularly of England at the beginning of the colonization period. From that point American history proceeds, but never detached from the experiences of the rest of the world. The development of England during the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries reacted powerfully on the colonies; all the European wars in which England had a part spread to the New World; the explorations of the American coast and interior, and the division of territory between nations were subjects for elaborate negotiations and international treaties between European powers. The history of the English colonies can, therefore, be understood only in the light of material drawn from foreign archives, especially those of England, France, Spain, and the Netherlands.

The two wars immediately preceding the foundation of the present republic — the French and Indian war, and the Revolutionary war — were especially European both in military and diplomatic events; and the study of the histories of the foreign countries interested in the New World, written from the foreign standpoint, is essential for a complete understanding of the colonial period by advanced students and teachers.

During the first forty years of the existence of the United States of America, the intimate connection with European history continued. Internal politics had a close connection with foreign treaties, wars, and territorial changes. Since the Florida cession, in 1819, the history of this country has had a closer relation with that of other American nations than with Europe; but there have always been outstanding international questions, such as the spoliation claims with France, the boundary disputes with England, and the relations with Hawaii. For many years thereafter the current of political influence was rather eastward than westward; American constitutions and political experiments were adopted and imitated abroad. More recently immigration and the development of ocean transportation have again brought us into closer contact with the economic, political, and social problems of Europe.

Every student, teacher, and writer of American history must from the beginning keep in mind the fact that the development of this country is only a part of a general movement, and that in the relations of foreign powers with the nations of the New World is often to be found the key to the actual direction of American history.

§ 4. Proper Position in a Curriculum.

In the opinion of the Conference on History which reported to the Committee of Ten in 1893, children may at eleven years of age profitably begin the formal study of history, and should carry it to the end of the high school. The programme suggested by the Conference introduces American history in two places: in the last year but one before reaching the high school, and in the third year of the high school. The advantage of such a division is that all pupils who reach well toward the end of the grammar school will have had some study of the subject; and that it can be repeated in a more systematic form when they are more mature. To set American history first in order is to exaggerate what is already strongest in a child's mind, his own surroundings. The history of any country taken by itself suggests too limited a set of human motives and habits of thought: we need cross lights, and Americans especially need contact with the story of other races and experiences. At the same time it is undoubtedly true that the best way to give a child a true conception of history, as of geography, is to begin with his surroundings and to let him observe for himself, as much as possible, how his own town, state, and government came into being. Such a process demands a thorough teacher, and can probably be applied only where the whole system of teaching is based on this centripetal and correlated plan.

In colleges American and English history are often the only branches of the subject taught. They should properly be preceded by a good college course in general history, with an adequate amount of collateral reading, and with some written work; a thorough course in English history, especially in the Tudor and Stuart periods, is perhaps the best preparation for American history; but mediæval and modern European history better precede than follow American history. Hence the careful study of American history is not likely to begin earlier than the Sophomore or Junior year; and should always be preceded by some subject more remote.

For graduate work American history is very convenient because the materials are everywhere about us and the field is little explored. It has also a close connection with the study of American government and economics, and therefore with current events. But no one can be fitted to be a specialist in American history who has not also a good all-round training in the general subject, and thus is able to compare intelligently the history of other countries with that of his own.

§ 5. Educative Value.

The same warning might be given to the student of other fields than American: no country furnishes in itself a sufficient lesson,—and the systematic study of the history of any nation which has really contributed to the world's political thought is educative in itself, and prepares the student to appreciate the history of other lands. In its effect on the mind American history is distinctly to be commended. The principal reasons for the study of history are that it trains the memory, is a steady practice in the use of materials, exercises the judgment, and sets before the student's mind a high standard of character. In all these respects American history is inferior to that of no other country. The events which are studied and should be kept in the memory are interesting in themselves and important for the world's development. The native races of America have for four centuries been a favorite subject for the imagination of Western Europe, and their customs are a commentary on the customs of Europe at the dawn of history and during the Germanic invasions. The three centuries of strife between these native races and the white invaders — what Parkman calls “the history of the forest” — is one of the world’s treasure-houses of romantic episodes, comparable with the history of chivalry. To the men and the principles of the Revolution the world has agreed to give its admiration. The later settlement of the West has been as yet too little studied, but we can see already that it is a movement not less important than the migrations of the nations at the close of the period of the greatness of the Roman Empire. The slavery struggle, culminating in the Civil War, is one of the two most important and interesting episodes since the French Revolution. Though it be said that “facts of themselves are hard to learn, even when supported by artificial systems of memorizing . . . they are like digits in arithmetic; they are learned only as a means to an end”; nevertheless the facts of American history are absorbingly interesting.

As a training in the use of materials American history has the great advantage of possessing a large body of sources in English, the only language known to most school children, and scattered abroad in many available volumes. The stimulating study of local history by American young people is of course confined to American history. There is an historical school which holds no history to have much training value unless it require the use of several languages, and unless the material be so scanty and incomplete that the scholar is obliged to leap from one stepping stone of fact to another, or to build a bridge of presumptions. Is not that history most valuable in which the bases for a judgment are broadest and surest? Where the country described, and often the very scenes of historic interest, lie all about the student, it is like studying geology in a broken and irregular region. Logical reasoning is as well applied to the growth of the United States as to the growth of Rome: and accurate knowledge, the foundation of good judgment, is much easier to attain.

As a means also of training the judgment, American history has great advantages. The mind is chiefly developed in three ways: by cultivating the power of discriminating observation; by strengthening the logical faculty of following an argument from point to point ; and by improving the process of comparison, that is, the judgment. It seems reasonable to claim that judgment about a country into the spirit of which a child is born, ought to have as sound a basis, and to be as quickly applicable to new problems, as judgment about a foreign nation with which its associations are purely artificial. The principal purpose of the study of history is to put the student into such a frame of mind that he may apply known principles to things with which he is for the first time confronted. It is the best training for administrative duties, for citizenship, for public life, and especially for the decision of any question which needs a knowledge of the past for its settlement.

So far as the study of character goes, American history furnishes a host of strong, individual, idea-producing men. Columbus, Franklin, Washington, Jefferson, Lincoln, Robert E. Lee, are some of the world's greatest forces. William Bradford, John Winthrop, Roger Williams, William Penn, the galaxy of Revolutionary statesmen, the great triumvirate, — Webster, Clay, and Calhoun, — are also men whose lives are a lesson in the art of statesmanship.

§ 6. Historical Basis.

Few countries have a history more complex and more difficult to reduce to a system. Many native races of various degrees of barbarism, and most races of Western Europe, have helped to people the United States. Settlements began at a number of widely separated points along the coast, which expanded into little commonwealths, each with its own institutions, interests and public men. Many of the early commonwealths became merged into others, as New Plymouth and New Haven ; most of these commonwealths continued, and the nation has thrown off additional states till there are now forty-five, each having a history of its own. The central government is complicated, and each part of it has had its peculiar growth. It is difficult to find a clue through the maze ; but it is not impossible, if regard be had for certain well-defined principles.

In the first place, the settlers whose children were to control North America were all of one stock, and had one general set of institutions which they brought with them from Britain. Some expanded one side of these institutions, and some another : but they were substantially the same people, having always much more in common than any of them had with any other people. As the English race grew and developed, Britain and the Colonies both diverged from one another and from the original type, the colonies perhaps less than the mother country : but to this day the two nations have substantially the same system of law and the same political traditions.

In the second place the significant part of America has never ceased growing since the beginning. The colonies stretched inland ; the United States spread its boundaries wider and wider ; new communities have continually been forming, widening and throwing off swarms to found other communities. The formation of the states west of the Alleghanies was in reality colonization of a new type, settlement of adjacent regions ; and the result has been the most successful relation between mother country and dependent communities : for the outlyers were from the first promised statehood. The basis of the nation has continually been widening, and hence unexpected changes have succeeded each other in the make-up of the general government. In this respect this nation has had a different set of social and economic problems from those of the older world.

In the third place a sectional divergence between North and South began to appear, and was much accentuated by the early throwing off of slavery by the Northern states. Slavery, therefore, harmful in itself to the section in which it persisted, became a rock of division within the Union, and no permanent peace was possible while it existed.

In the fourth place the people of the United States have shown a decided desire to come closer together, a tendency which triumphed over the disjointed condition of the country in the years immediately following the Revolution, and over the separatist tendencies of the slavery conflict. In one sentence, — the history of America is substantially a history of the development of English traditions in a new and rich country, and among a people who in the last few decades have gradually developed a strong sense of their own common interests.

§ 7. Convenient Subdivisions.

Keeping in mind that the growth of America has been steady and advancing from beginning to end on natural lines, no great crises appear dividing American history into separate periods: colonization grew out of the conditions of Europe; colonial institutions expanded out of English institutions; the Revolution was probably an inevitable result of divergence in the institutions of the two branches of the English stock; the Constitution was an adaptation of what the people had learned in the experience of their own colonial and state governments, in the Revolution and the trying time which followed it; the peaceful revolutions of Jefferson's and Jackson's elections were what might have been expected from the growth of the democratic spirit, the opening up of the West, and the extension of the suffrage; the Civil War was the final array of forces long opposed to each other.

The memory is, however, aided and the succession of the history made more clear by suggesting the principal groups into which the events of American history arrange themselves. Suggestions as to the subdivisions of topics in American history may be found in W. F. Allen's History Topics; in the tables of contents of standard histories, especially those of Hildreth and McMaster; in the analyses of such school histories as Scudder's United States, and Fiske's School History; and in the various topical outlines noted further on. The following series of such suggestions are meant to serve as a basis for courses of lectures or lessons, and can be used in connection with the general readings (§ 56) or topical readings (Parts II and III).

II. METHODS IN GENERAL.

§ 8. The Place of "Method."

It is easy to plunge into the study of American history; books are abundant, and the subject is vast and attractive. To reach a satisfactory result is more difficult; the material requires sifting, the secondary books need critical use, and the text-books are often bald and inadequate. Above all, no historical subject has more need of intelligent selection of topics and references, or of systematic and thorough investigation.

"Method" is simply the use of devices which experience has suggested, for gaining and holding the student's interest, and for applying his time and thought in such a way as to make mental effort go farthest toward securing a permanent impression. There is no general method suited to all ages, or circumstances, or minds, or even to all parts of the subject. Method is simply a means to an end; and uniformity in methods denotes that the means has become perverted. The objects to be attained are simple, and a few principles may be laid down as to the best way of attaining them.

The primary necessity in history is to know the truth, and that implies that every student should see for himself how history is written. This is best done by a study of the sources upon which every historical writer must base his knowledge. Hence all good methods include training in the use of the original records on which a statement is based. In schools this part of the work can usually be done by using extracts from the sources; in colleges there may be the use of a considerable body of sources on limited subjects; in graduate work the student must learn to exhaust all the sources of information on the subject which he has chosen to investigate.

The next essential is to train the student to handle secondary works with discrimination. In schools this may be taught by using several parallel text-books, and comparing them with standard authors; in colleges by wide collateral reading; in advanced work by a study of authors, and by tracking them back to their sources. One of the first things to break up in a child's mind is the confidence that "it must be so because the book says so"; he must learn to discriminate between accurate and inaccurate books, as well as between accounts written at second or third hand and records of contemporaries of the events which they describe.

The task of finding material which bears on a particular subject grows harder as books multiply; hence every pupil, reader, teacher, and investigator must know how to use bibliographical aids; how to get at that which bears directly on his subject, with the least possible expenditure of energy upon the mechanical part of study. In schools such work must be very simple, and may be confined to the lists of books in text-books and standard authors; in colleges every student should learn how to use library and periodical indexes; in investigation a knowledge of bibliography opens the gate to many important fields of materials.

The study of history also includes experience in recording what one hears or reads. This training is necessary to enable one to recall what has once gone through the mind, to use the facts thus recorded in other combinations, and to make plain the results of such investigation to other people. Hence, a good method includes training in note-taking and in the statement of results in a clear and comprehensible fashion. The youngest child, who can write and set down what he sees in the world about him, can also note historical facts in their simplest and broadest form. In the college, where lectures are common, the note-books are indispensable, and should be a plain, well-arranged record. To the investigator training in workmanlike note-taking is especially desirable; for on the accuracy and clearness of his notes the value of his conclusions often depends. It should always be borne distinctly in mind, however, that the taking and keeping of notes is not scholarship; but only a convenient means by which scholarship may be attained.

To reach conclusions for one's self, to arrange material cogently and make it speak to other people is the highest and most difficult historical task. Yet in principle it is not unlike the process by which a child tells whether or no a flower is growing, or whether a weight falls more slowly on a slope than directly downward. Historical compositions should be very simple pieces of historical deduction. In college, theses and "special reports" test and train the power of statement. The graduate student and historical writer must show this power or fail.

History includes a knowledge of the people whose annals are being studied — their antecedents, habits, traditions, and character; and also a knowledge of the natural conditions which surround them — the physical conformation of their country, the climate, productions, and means of communication. Geography, sociology, and economics — in their truest senses — are necessary aids to history, in all grades of study up to the work of the most accomplished historian.

§ 9. Preparation of Teachers.

In 1893 the Conference on History, Civil Government, and Political Economy, in its Report to the Committee of Ten, thought it necessary to give this warning: "Finally, we urge that only teachers who have had adequate special training shall be employed to teach these important subjects." Such preparation is no longer difficult to get by those who are fitting themselves for the profession of teaching, and it is not out of the reach of those already in service. Self-training is hard to apply to history because so much depends on the suggestion of the teacher, the comparison of views, and the practice in working on historical material. For those who have no other opportunity, and yet are determined to study American history, the methods suggested in § 13 are recommended, although it is hard to learn how to do things well without some criticism and assistance. Those who cannot go beyond a high-school education have no opportunity properly to prepare for teaching; they can only make the most possible out of the practical exercises which have been required of them. In normal schools history is apt to be taught in a very superficial way, without the life-giving contact with a variety of material, including sources. College courses in history may furnish good training if they call for plenty of written work and reflection, and they might be coupled with suitable courses in pedagogics. The graduate schools are intended to provide instruction for those who are to be teachers of specialities, and they should be the best schools of historical training. In all places, intending teachers should take pains to get as broad a foundation as possible, to study in as many branches of the subject, and under as many different instructors as circumstances permit.

For teachers already at work, and who cannot take the time for a year or more of regular study, there are several systems at command — teachers' institutes, Chautauqua gatherings, and summer schools. The summer schools, now offered by many universities, give contact with trained minds, the use of large libraries, and practice in approved methods. University extension, whenever it is really a system of work and not of mere listening to lectures, opens up new fields and modes of thought. A few universities are now establishing courses open to teachers during the school year, and carried on in exact and educative methods. In a few places university instruction in pedagogy is also open to actual teachers. Whatever the opportunity, no teacher of history ought to be satisfied without making every effort to improve himself in knowledge and in practical historical methods. Wherever there are suitable opportunities to prepare for the teaching of history in general, American history is likely to receive due attention. The essentials of proper preparation are a knowledge of the details, which may be gained from judicious reading; a knowledge of American literature, as a collateral and source of illustration; and experience in using material. Travel, the visiting of historical sites and monuments, is also a great aid.

Assuming good general training, how is the teacher to prepare for the day's exercises? He should in his own reading have accumulated extracts and illustrations with which to enrich the lesson; he should know the text-book so well that he need not open it. The teacher's function is not to enforce study, but to arrange and organize the material outside the text-book, to apply it where it will enlarge the text-book, and to stimulate the pupils. That is, the teacher's preparation is of the same sort as the pupil's preparation, only broader and fuller, and coördinated beforehand.

§ 10. School Work.

What part of the work in American history may be undertaken in primary and secondary schools? The most advanced suggestion is for teaching during eight—or even six—years, of which about a third would be given to American history and allied subjects, such as civil government. The amount of time devoted to history is enough to teach children something about great men and the legends which gather around them, the elements of Ancient history, and of French and English history, American history during two years, and one year of "intensive study," which in many cases would be given to an American subject. Children up to sixteen or seventeen years old are perfectly capable of doing all that is included in this programme. They should usually first cover the whole field in a simple text-book, with collateral reading of extracts from standard authors; later they should go over the same ground again with a more advanced text-book, wider reading, topical work, and compositions on subjects chosen from American history, taking up as a parallel study civil government and the principles of economics. In the year of intensive study they should use secondary authorities widely, and make some use of the sources. Throughout the course historical geography ought to be taught, reiterated, and enforced, till it comes home to the child's mind as an inseparable part of historical study. Illustrative methods should also be used, such as the display of maps, charts, and lantern-slides; and interest may be stimulated by visits to historic places, by debates, and by mock legislatures. Children may also be aroused by the study of their own local history and institutions.

The first thing that is needed for American history in schools is the conviction that it is a serious subject, not studied for mere information, or simply "to make good citizens," but as a valuable means of training the mind to collect material, to distinguish between truth, probability, and falsehood, and to assemble and analyze the materials for forming an opinion. History is almost the only philosophical subject in the grammar-school curriculum, almost the only one dealing with human character and motives as a basis for study. To a child who does not go beyond the grammar school, history ought to give an interest in knowing what really happens, as distinguished from what is merely rumored. To the pupils going on to colleges and professional schools it should be a foundation for later work. Toward the end of the grammar-school course, then, there should be a year devoted to American history. It should be taught as a practical, and not simply as a text-book, subject, dealing with the "elements" of the subject in the large sense of the word,—that is, it should include some notion of the historical geography of North America, of the people who came into the New World, and of the principal events in their development into a great nation. In the high schools the instruction should include more use of materials and more written work.

§ 11. College Work.

Such a thing as an "information course" should not exist in a college; it is less excusable in American history than in most other subjects, because there is so much material at hand which can be used for training. With older minds, already accustomed to read, to study, and to digest history, the text-book should be some brief and comprehensive sketch, intended only to show the relation of the parts of the subject, and the development of one period out of another. Details should be gained by extensive reading, so arranged as to take in a variety of authors. The advice of the German professor as to the three requisites of historical study is pertinent: "(1) Read; (2) read widely; (3) read very widely." Historical reading is like the making of Japanese lacquer work: one imperceptible coating is added to another; by and by it is found that where the layers are most numerous a pattern stands out in relief. The effect left in the mind from reading many books on the same subject is a picture in which the shades are the spots on which all or most of the authors have touched. The works in American history are now numerous, well written, and valuable. The literature is extraordinarily rich in biographies and books of reminiscence, as well as in the works of public men, so that there is not merely an opportunity to fill the mind with well-chosen thoughts, but an equal opportunity to weigh opinions and set them over against each other. (See § 58 for a description of a method of collateral reading known as the "conference system.")

The college is also a place where written work of all kinds is most easily carried out. In later pages (§§ 65-73) the effort will be made to describe several appropriate systems in detail. Without some such work, — topics, papers, special reports, written recitations, essays or theses, — the training element of the subject is lost. In American history such work is especially advisable; in few subjects is there such a variety of topics of every degree of difficulty, many of them as yet quite unwrought. The college has also an atmosphere of interest in political and historical matters, which makes possible many side devices for lighting up the subject, such as lectures, public debates, discussions, and the like.

It is possible also in college to specialize in American history, to take courses in the theory of government, in constitutional law, in American diplomacy, in financial and economic history, in American government, and in federal government, as well as in American literature; and to make a special study of some one period or topic. The college is the place for laying a deep foundation on a broad sub-structure. Here also is the great opportunity to connect American history with that of other countries.

§ 12. Investigation.

The present accumulated knowledge of history is due to the investigators who have examined and correlated the sources of history, and then have generalized upon them. Investigation is the most difficult kind of historical study, but it is perhaps the most valuable sort of training, because it requires patience and thoroughness in searching for material, judgment in selecting out of it the cogent facts, a peculiar training of the analytical powers in arranging and classifying material, a high degree of mental force in making generalizations, and quick imagination in so stating the results as to appeal to other minds.

These advantages may be gained throughout all the parts of the educational field. The youngest pupil who begins to study history for himself, may be taught to find and to bring forward a contribution of facts got somewhere outside of the text-book. As he progresses, more emphasis may be laid on the necessity of getting back of secondary books in order to settle particular points. A pupil very early may be taught to distinguish between contemporary accounts and records, and later works based on such material. The topical method (§ 67) may be so used as to instil this principle.

In college, where the object is to get a general view of history, and where students are expected to read and digest much from standard works, the benefits of investigation can best be gained by practice in going to the bottom of very limited subjects, so as to be prepared in later life to look up historical points, or intelligently to review the work of others.

In the graduate school, and often in the upper classes of the college, where there is an opportunity for specialization, historical investigation becomes the most important element in the student's training. He must learn to exhaust the literature of the subject, to use all the available material, and to make himself master of that which he undertakes to investigate. A good standard for such a student to set before himself is to consider, from the beginning, how he can state the results in a manner most likely to be useful to others. Whether he aims at publication or not, his work should be written with reference to the reader.

American history lends itself readily to investigation in all grades, because the material is almost all in English, and because it is so available for pupils of every age. There are various sets of leaflets adapted for school use, and extracts from the works of the early narrators and travelers are in many places available for school reading. Most colleges have a set of the invaluable documents published by the United States Government, and many have full sets of colonial records. Some of the larger universities have access to such unsurpassed collections as those of the Boston Public Library, the Carter-Brown Library in Providence, the Lenox Library in New York, the Peabody Library of Baltimore, and the collections of the various state historical societies.

§ 13. Study without a Teacher.

Since the material of history is to be found in considerable part in print, the subject is one which can be carried on without a teacher and even without access to a large library. The admirable work of several societies for directing people by correspondence has proved that the study of history may be made both profitable and pleasant to persons far away from schools and universities; and the Chautauqua systems of directed home study have widely extended the love for the study of history. A distinction must be made between reading history and studying it. Such writers as Macaulay and Parkman may be read as one would read other masterpieces of English literature, and will leave a distinct impression upon the mind; but the study of history implies a concentration upon a field small enough to permit the use of various parallel authorities.

It is of little use to try to study general history by one's self. The best books are brief and cannot present the warm picture of men and stirring events which may be obtained from lectures and extended study. American history, however, is well adapted for home study. The first necessity is to choose some brief books which cover the ground in a summary fashion, so that the student may have in his mind the dimensions of the subject; then comes the process of widening, the working out of the ground plan of the historical edifice. For this purpose the students should choose some of the standard histories such as are suggested in paragraph 20 below or through the topical analyses (§ 16b). In the better brief books will be found lists of classified authorities. It is desirable that a student should own his books, so that he may annotate them in the margins as he goes on. Another excellent exercise is to put into the margins a running analysis of the book: it sharpens the faculties to consider what is the author's precise intention in each successive paragraph; and whenever the reader has occasion to use the same book again he will be surprised to find how the argument comes back to him through his abstract. Many students have derived benefit from the practice of writing out in a brief form the ideas which have been gathered from reading on some previous day. Such a practice continued for a few weeks will almost invariably strengthen the memory and improve one's powers of application.

Having thus gone over several books on a period, the student begins to find that one effaces another; the methods, the order, the proportions, of one writer do not agree with those of the next; and the knowledge of men and events so laboriously acquired begins to dissolve in the very multiplicity of facts. Hence, it is necessary for the student at home to make up some written outline of his subject,—a sort of table of contents of his questions, arranged in what seems to him a logical order. This outline will be in a sense the student's own history. If several persons are working together in classes there may be some sub-division of labor. Thus, in studying the administration of Jackson one person may well take up Jackson's personal character; another his relations with the civil service; another his bank controversy; another the nullification episode; another the surplus-revenue question; and each may then communicate his results to the others.

The student at home should not neglect the use of sources. Presumably he will not have material so abundant that he may base his study upon it; but he ought to read enough to give him that flavor of original accounts which is indispensable for the right understanding of history. For instance, after going over a brief account of the Confederation and then reading Curtis or McMaster, a student should read Washington's letter of 1783 to the governors, the Northwest Ordinance, and Patrick Henry's speech in the Virginia Convention on the results of the Confederation. While it is not likely that the student will reach different conclusions from those of the standard writers, he will certainly come into contact with the men of the time which he is studying.

It is difficult to get a sharp and permanent impression from general books, or even from sources, without some system of note-taking. On the other hand, students are apt to do too much of this sort of writing; they copy out long, exact quotations from books which are perfectly accessible; they do not know how to digest the author's statements and to reduce them to a brief form.

Notes should be a summary rather than a digest ; they should state the main points with sufficient illustration to make the argument clear. The principal danger of the lonely student is always that he will read too much and absorb too little. Without some system of brief note-taking and outlining, the subject will quickly disappear. One means of holding it is for the student from time to time to write some historical narrative, using in part such original material as may be accessible to him. Another is to take every opportunity to listen to historical lectures, and so to add the element of personal association to that of knowledge of facts.

§ 14. Collateral Subjects.

As has several times been suggested above (§ 3) the study of American history does not stand alone ; it should be associated throughout with the study of kindred subjects and of other fields of history. Geography cannot be too much emphasized ; a knowledge of the elementary physical geography of North America is essential for an understanding of the course of settlement and the distribution of races and communities inland. Political geography is founded upon physical, and is an index of the interplay of nations. Since the most absorbing questions of American history have been social and economic, a knowledge of the principles of economics is necessary for teachers and desirable in an elementary form for pupils. American literature, as illustrating the spirit of the people, is also a part of American history.

Of the histories of other countries, that of England comes nearest to ours, and up to 1776 the two are practically parts of each other. France was also for a century and a half an active political factor in North America, and the French Revolution is closely connected with the American. Spain was long a rival and enemy of the English colonies, and by the possession of Cuba is still important in the history of the United States. The Netherlands, Switzerland, and Germany furnish valuable points of comparison with our federal system ; and in the Napoleonic Wars the United States was a sufferer and at length a participant.

III. BIBLIOGRAPHY OF AMERICAN HISTORY.

§ 15. Bibliography of Methods in History.

To the subject of methods in history great attention has been paid of late years, and a considerable literature both of books and periodical articles has grown up. Those here mentioned are almost all in English. There are two bibliographies of the subject :

Granville Stanley Hall and John Mansfield, Hints toward a Select and Descriptive Bibliography of Education. Boston, Heath, 1886. — Includes the titles of many books, pamphlets, and articles on history, especially at pp. 140-149.

Burke Aaron Hinsdale, How to Study and Teach History with Particular Reference to the History of the United States. N.Y., Appleton, 1894 (International Education series, Vol. XXV). — Bibliographical note at the beginning of each chapter. An admirable book in arrangement and execution.

§ 15 c. Collateral Authorities on Methods.

Parts of some of the general books contain special material on American History, especially W. F. Allen and others in Hall's Methods of Teaching History. Special suggestions to teachers may be found in the introduction to many of the brief school histories, especially: J. G. Allen, Topical References; G. L. Fox, Study of History in Unity Clubs and Classes; Alexander Johnston, School History; Horace E. Scudder, School History; A. C. Thomas, History of the United States; Sheldon-Barnes, Studies in American History; Epochs of American History, etc.

§ 16. Special Bibliographical Aids.

No systematic bibliography of American History exists. Sabin's Dictionary of Books relating to America is intended to include the title of every book published in America or about America: but it includes only titles up to the dates of the several volumes (1867-92) and it does not refer to periodicals. It now (1895) reaches the name of Henry H. Smith; a set costs, including all numbers so far published, about five hundred dollars. Of the publishers' catalogues Clarke's Bibliotheca Americana is the most useful. Leypoldt's American Catalogue contains the titles of all books in print in America in 1876, and since issued up to 1890. Justin Winsor's Narrative and Critical History of America is a work of vast learning, and includes admirable bibliographies of all subjects treated. These bibliographies are complete to the date of publication (1884-1889); but the plan of the work did not provide for titles on the history of the United States since about 1840. W. E. Foster's invaluable References to the History of Presidential Administrations, and References to the Constitution, do not go back of about 1787. He has recently begun a new series of useful bibliographies in the Bulletin of the Library over which he so ably presides. Several topical outlines have been prepared by college and other teachers, of which Sparks's Topical References is the fullest: but they deal very little with sources. Poole's Index, the lists in the American edition of the Review of Reviews, Fletcher's A. L. A. Index (which hardly justifies its title) and Jones's Index to Legal Periodicals are indispensable guides to periodical literature. Of the library catalogues those of the Boston Athenæum and Peabody Institute (Baltimore) are the fullest in detailed classification and are comparatively recent; and the full titles of most books can be easily found in the catalogue of the British Museum. To the government documents the two pamphlets by John G. Ames, and Church and Smith's Tables, and the monthly catalogues issued by the government since the beginning of the year 1895, are the most useful guides. Poore's Catalogue of Government Publications has a very unsatisfactory index. (See § 16 e.)

For many subjects the easiest path of entrance is by the foot-notes of the standard histories and biographies. The most serviceable are those of George Bancroft in the earlier volumes of his first edition and his History of the Constitution; Henry Cabot Lodge, Short History of the English Colonies; Henry Adams, Administration of Jefferson and Madison; H. Von Holst, Constitutional History of the United States; J. F. Rhodes, History of the United States since 1850; and more than all others, Winsor's Narrative and Critical History.

§ 16 e. Indexes to Public Documents, 1776-1895.

To the valuable set of government documents there is no adequate guide: Poore's Catalogue of Government Publications affords some aid, but not so much as its title would indicate, owing to an imperfect and misleading index. The following is a nearly complete list of aids:

1820-1891. John Griffith Ames, Finding List, showing where in the set of Congressional Documents the individual volumes of certain series of Government publications are found. Washington, 1893.

1817-1891. John Griffith Ames, List of Congressional Documents from the Fifteenth to the Fifty-first Congress. Washington, 1892.

1889-1893. John Griffith Ames, Comprehensive Index of the Publications of the United States Government. Washington, 1894.

1895- Catalogue of United States Public Documents, issued monthly by the Superintendent of Documents. Washington.

- 1789-1877. Boston Athenæum, Catalogue, V, 3054-3109.
- 1789-1859. Boston Public Library, Index (ed. 1861), pp. 795-842.
- 1859-1863. Boston Public Library, Index, First Supplement (ed. 1866), pp. 644-654.
- 1789-1892. Alonzo W. Church and Henry H. Smith, Tables showing the Contents of the several volumes comprising the Annals of Congress, Congressional Debates, Congressional Globe, Supreme Court Reports, etc., arranged by Years and Congresses. [Washington, 1892.]
- 1786-1851. Digested Summary of Private Claims. 3 vols. Washington, 1853.
- 1871-1880. J. B. Holloway and W. H. French, Consolidated Index of Claims reported by the Commissioner of Claims to the House of Representatives. Washington, 1892.
- 1789-1817. Index to the Executive Communications made to the House until the end of the Fourteenth Congress. 18 Cong., 1 sess., XII, No. 163.
- 1831-1839. Index to the Executive Documents and Reports of Committees of the House from the Twenty-second to the Twenty-fifth Congress. House Docs., 35 Cong., 2 sess. Washington.
- 1815-1887. T. H. McKee, Reports of the Select and Special Committees, United States Senate. Washington, 1887.
- 1815-1887. T. H. McKee, Reports of the Select and Special Committees, United States House of Representatives. Washington, 1887.
- 1839-1869. Edward McPherson, Consolidated Index of the Executive Documents of the House, from the Twenty-sixth to the Fortieth Congress. Washington, 1869.
- 1839-1869. Edward McPherson, Consolidated Index to Reports of the Committees of the House. Washington, 1869.
- 1789-1809. Albert Ordway, General Index of the Journals of Congress, from the First to Tenth Congress inclusive. House Reports, 46 Cong., 2 sess., No. 1776. Washington, 1880.
- 1809-1821. Albert Ordway, General Index of the Journals of Congress, from the Eleventh to Sixteenth Congress inclusive. House Reports, 47 Cong., 1 sess., V [VII], No. 1556. Washington, 1883.
- 1776-1881. Ben Perley Poore, Descriptive Catalogue of Government Publications. Washington, 1885.

§ 17. General Reference Books on American History.

The following works contain a variety of historical data, usually arranged alphabetically by persons or subjects; such books much facilitate easy topical work, and the better ones are a guide to more detailed information. The titles are arranged alphabetically by editors (or publishers, where the editor is not indicated).

William Allen, American Biographical Dictionary. Boston, 1857.

S. Austin Allibone, A Critical Dictionary of English Literature and British and American Authors. Phila., 1858-71. 3 vols.—Also a Supplement to Allibone's Critical Dictionary (edited by John Foster Kirk). 2 vols. Phila., 1891.

The American Annual Cyclopædia and Register of Important Events. 36 vols. N. Y., Appleton, 1861-95.—The volumes from 1861 to 1875 inclusive form one series with an Index in a separate volume. The later volumes are denominated "New Series," and there is an Index, in a separate volume, to the twelve volumes from 1876 to 1887 inclusive.

Frederick A. P. Barnard, editor, Johnson's [Revised] Universal Cyclopædia. N. Y., 1888. 8 vols.—A new edition (edited by Charles Kendall Adams). 8 vols. N. Y., 1893.

Francis S. Drake, Dictionary of American Biography, including Men of the Time. Boston, 1872.

Evert A. Duyckinck and George L. Duyckinck, Cyclopædia of American Literature. 2 vols. N. Y., Scribners, 1856.

The Encyclopædia Britannica. Ninth edition. 25 vols. London, 1875.

John J. Lalor, editor, Cyclopædia of Political Science, Political Economy, and of the Political History of the United States. 3 vols. Chicago, 1881-84.

Charles Lanman, Biographical Annals of the Civil Government of the United States. N. Y. [Copyright, 1886].

Josephus Nelson Larned, History for Ready Reference from the Best Historians, Biographers, and Specialists: Their own words in a complete system of history. 5 vols. Springfield, Mass., 1894-95.

Benson John Lossing, Harper's Popular Cyclopædia of United States History. 2 vols. N. Y., 1881.

The National Cyclopædia of American Biography. 5 vols. N. Y., 1892-94.

Carl Ploetz, Epitome of Ancient, Mediæval, and Modern History. (Translated with extensive additions by William H. Tillinghast.) Boston, 1884.

George Ripley and Charles A. Dana, editors, The American Cyclopædia: A Popular Dictionary of General Knowledge. 16 vols. N. Y., etc., 1859-63. — Revised edition, 1873, with binder's title Appleton's Cyclopædia. 16 vols. N. Y., 1873-76. — Also a General and Analytical Index to the American Cyclopædia. N. Y., 1878.

Edmund Clarence Stedman and Ellen Mackay Hutchinson, A Library of American Literature from the Earliest Settlement to the Present Time. 10 vols. N. Y., 1888-90.

Stoddard's Encyclopædia Americana, a Companion to the Encyclopædia Britannica (Ninth Edition) and to all other Encyclopædias. 4 vols. N. Y., etc., 1883-89.

James Grant Wilson and John Fiske, editors, Appleton's Cyclopædia of American Biography. 6 vols. N. Y., 1887-89.

§ 18. School Text-Books.

Until very recently the text-books intended for schools were either dull or ridiculously out of proportion. The colonial and Revolutionary wars were usually the principal subjects. Later came a succession of poor popular histories, inaccurate and trivial; to some of them the authors did not so much as give their names. Recently there has been a great improvement, and there are now half a dozen text-books of decided merit.

The main characteristics of a good text-book are the following: It should be accurate and therefore it should be prepared by an expert on the subject; proper proportions should be observed, so that no part of the field be neglected or unduly expanded. A point of view should be adopted which avoids details of military history, and dwells on economic and social development as well as on political history. The book must be interesting, and hence great attention should be paid by the writer to style. An indispensable adjunct is a set of numerous, clear, and accurate maps illustrating historical geography, and not merely campaigns. Of course there must be bibliographical material enough to lead pupils to read and study in other books, and to aid them in topical work. A good book will have a convenient apparatus of contents, indexes, running headings, marginal dates, and the like, to make the subject clear. The writer must take a manly and patriotic tone, without over-glorification of our own country ; and he must be sufficiently familiar with the history and institutions of other countries to know what is distinctively American. Illustrations are in part an aid to interest, and in part a necessary interpretation ; in selecting them care should be taken to represent real things and not imaginary sketches of what was or might have been ; portraits should be numerous and characteristic, and the artist and present place of the original of each picture should be mentioned ; but the pictures should not encroach upon the space needed for the text.

No book fills all these requirements. Higginson's Young Folks' History is still unsurpassed in its field, but it is devoted almost entirely to the colonial period. Alexander Johnston's School History (the larger work) is remarkable for the broad treatment of the later period and for its superior historical maps ; in its form it is rather solid ; the style is dull and the proportions are imperfect. Horace E. Scudder's History of the United States has excellent summaries and beautiful maps, but is written a little below the high-school age, and often is indistinct. John Fiske's History of the United States for Schools has a delightfully easy style, and the book is beautifully illustrated and is supplemented by the questions of Mr. Hill ; but the treatment of the period since 1789 is tender, the reading-matter is slender for a school history, and text and maps need revision. Sheldon-Barnes's Studies in American History is made up on a novel plan, — the weaving together of a narrative out of extracts from contemporary writers ; but only a superior teacher is likely to supply sufficient connective matter. A. C. Thomas in his History of the United States has made a good book, though dull, well furnished with aids ; but his maps are still imperfect, though better than the average.

Several new histories are now in course of preparation, and nearly all the books mentioned above are frequently revised and errors or omissions are corrected. For convenience of reference the exact titles of a few school text-books are here appended ; they are not of equal merit.

§ 18 a. Brief List of School Text-Books.

Edward Eggleston, A History of the United States and its People for the Use of Schools. N.Y., American Book Co. [Copyright, 1888].

Mary Sheldon Barnes and Earl Barnes, Studies in American History. Boston, Heath, 1893.

John Fiske, A History of the United States for Schools. Boston, Houghton, 1894.

Thomas Wentworth Higginson, Young Folks' History of the United States. N.Y., Longmans.

Alexander Johnston, A History of the United States for Schools; with an Introductory History of the Discovery and English Colonization of North America. N.Y., Holt, 1885.

David H. Montgomery, The Leading Facts of American History (Leading Facts of History series). Boston, Ginn, 1891.

Horace E. Scudder, A History of the United States . . . for the Use of Schools and Academies. Phila., Butler [Copyright, 1894].

Joel D. Steele and Esther Baker Steele, A Brief History of the United States. N.Y. [Copyright, 1885].— Usually known as "Barnes' History."

Allen C. Thomas, A History of the United States. Boston, Heath, 1894.

§ 19. College Text-Books.

In college teaching two general methods appear to be employed; either some small book is used as a text-book with or without collateral reading, and often supplemented by informal lectures by the teacher; or some large philosophical work like Von Holst's Constitutional History is made a basis for class discussion or criticism by the instructor. The first method is the natural one, provided it is understood that the text-book is merely the nucleus about which shall be grouped the student's notes of lectures and reading. Hence the matter contained in the text-book should not be repeated in the lectures, although many subjects not otherwise properly treated may be given adequate attention before the class, and subjects difficult of explanation may be elucidated from a different point of view.

The basal book should contain, therefore, a good body of fact. It should be lucidly arranged and marked by a distinct literary style. Good maps are essential, and some help to collateral reading in the way of bibliographies will be useful. There is at present no one volume on American history which can be said to answer these requirements. Goldwin Smith's The United States is an interesting essay on the political history of the nation ; Arthur Gilman's History of the People of the United States is deficient in several respects and is now rather out of date ; T. W. Higginson's Larger History is a bundle of essays, many of them of great value and all interesting, but it is not a connected history, and stops almost with the close of Jackson's second term ; Alexander Johnston's The United States contains perhaps the best presentation of the later period to be found between two covers, but his treatment of the earlier period is peculiarly inaccurate and inadequate. The same author's American Politics is almost a model treatment of the political history of the country since 1789. E. B. Andrews's History of the United States in two volumes has not established its claim to the confidence of scholars. The Constitutional History of Judson S. Landon, and Simon Sterne's Constitutional History are hardly broad enough for text-book use.

Both the authors of this Guide have tried their hands at concise histories intended for college or for university-extension use. Edward Channing has published a brief History of the United States, 1765-1865, in the Cambridge Historical Series, and Albert Bushnell Hart has edited the Epochs of American History in three volumes, writing one of the volumes himself. On the same general plan as the latter publication is the American History Series, in five volumes.

§ 19 a. List of College Text-Books.

American History Series. 5 vols. N.Y., Scribners, 1892. — Vol. I. George Park Fisher, The Colonial Era. 1892. — Vol. II. William M. Sloane, The French War and the Revolution. 1893. — Vol. III. Francis A. Walker, The Making of the Nation. 1895. — Vols. IV, V. John W. Burgess, From the Conclusion of Peace in 1815 to the End of Reconstruction ; in preparation in 1895.

Elisha Benjamin Andrews, History of the United States. 2 vols. N.Y., Scribners, 1894.

Edward Channing, The United States of America, 1765-1865. (Cambridge Historical series.) N.Y., Macmillan & Co., 1896.

Epochs of American History. 3 vols. N.Y., Longmans. — Vol. I. Reuben Gold Thwaites, The Colonies. 1891. — Vol. II. Albert Bushnell Hart, Formation of the Union. 1892. — Vol. III. Woodrow Wilson, Division and Reunion. 1893.

Goldwin Smith, The United States, an Outline of Political History, 1492-1871. N.Y., Macmillan, 1893.

Simon Sterne, Constitutional History and Political Development of the United States. N.Y., Putnam's, 4th ed., 1888.

§ 20. General Histories.

There is no comprehensive history of America from the discovery to the present time. The so-called "Bryant's Popular History" which was written by Sydney Howard Gay, covers the whole field, but an undue proportion of the space is devoted to colonial history. Bancroft stops at 1789, Hildreth at 1821, Tucker at 1840, Winsor at about 1840; Von Holst begins practically at 1829, Schouler at 1781; and Parkman, Adams, McMaster, Fiske, and Rhodes cover only limited fields or periods. It is hence the more necessary to bring students in contact with a variety of histories. Hildreth, for the period he covers, is a painstaking and accurate historian, and he discusses most of the political events which are worth remembering; but his book is tedious and in parts

*not so much
history*

prejudiced. Many of the essays in Winsor's America have high historical value. For combined literary and historical merit no American historian equals Parkman, who has seized upon the imperishable interest of the French colonization, and the final victory over it of the English. Henry Adams's account of the administrations of Jefferson and Madison is a model of clear, enlightened, and fearless historical composition; Von Holst is too long for the ordinary reader, but the final chapters in most of his volumes are unique summaries of political and economic relations. Schouler's broad and reasonably complete treatment of the whole field since 1783 is marred by an eccentric and undignified style. For the Civil War and later history Ropes's Story of the Civil War and Rhodes's history are the only extended works written in a scientific spirit. There is still an opportunity for some able historian to write a complete history of America from the discovery to near the present day, in three or four volumes, a book comparable with J. R. Green's History of the English People; or even a book on the general lines of G. F. Bright's English History would be a boon to teachers and students.

In addition to the list of brief general histories (§ 19 a) the following books will be found more or less serviceable for reading, for topical work, and as parallels to college lecture courses. The list should also be supplemented by the special histories and biographies enumerated in §§ 22, 25.

§ 20 a. Larger Comprehensive Works.

- 1800-1817. ✕ Henry Adams, History of the United States. 9 vols. N.Y., Scribners, 1889-91.
- 1760-1804. John Adolphus, The History of England. 7 vols. London, 1840-45.
- 1492-1789. ✕ George Bancroft, A History of the United States. Boston, 1834-74. — A six-volume edition, known as The Author's Last Revision, was published at N.Y. in 1883-85.
- 1492-1870. ✕ William Cullen Bryant and Sydney Howard Gay, A Popular History of the United States. 4 vols. N.Y., Scribners, 1876-81.

- 1783-1789. X George Ticknor Curtis, Constitutional History of the United States. — One volume published at N.Y. (Harpers) in 1889, a posthumous second volume is announced, 1895.
- 1784-1875. Jefferson Davis, The Rise and Fall of the Confederate Government. 2 vols. N.Y., Appleton, 1881.
- 1492-1700. John Andrew Doyle, The English in America. 3 vols. Published at London, Longmans, 1882-87. — Reprinted with a different pagination by Holt, N.Y.
- 1850-1865. John Williams Draper, History of the American Civil War. 3 vols. N.Y., Harpers, 1867-70.
- 1000-1600. John Fiske, The Discovery of America. 2 vols. Boston, Houghton, 1892. Fiske's other historical works form with this part of a comprehensive history as follows: The Beginnings of New England, The American Revolution, in 2 vols., The Critical Period of American History (1783-89).
- 1789-1867. Horace Greeley, The American Conflict. 2 vols. Hartford, Case, 1864-67.
- 1492-1821. X Richard Hildreth, The History of the United States. 6 vols. N.Y., Harpers, 1851-56.
- 1700-1800. William Edward Hartpole Lecky, A History of England in the Eighteenth Century. 8 vols. London, Longmans, 1878-90.
- 1783-1821. X John Bach McMaster, A History of the People of the United States. 4 vols. N.Y., Appleton, 1883-95.
- 1713-1783. Lord Mahon, History of England. 7 vols. Boston, Little, 1853-54. — A convenient edition is the "Tauchnitz edition" in paper covers.
- 1745-1802. William Nathaniel Massey, A History of England during the Reign of George the Third. 4 vols. London, 1855-63.
- 1492-1763. Francis Parkman, France and England in North America, a Series of Historical Narratives. 9 vols. Boston, Little, 1865-92.

- 1000-1840. ✕ Justin Winsor, editor, The Narrative and Critical History of America. 8 vols. Boston, Houghton, 1886-89.

§ 21. Historical Geography.

No important subject connected with American history has been so neglected as the historical geography of the United States. Territorial history is nevertheless essential to an understanding of the general subject. The sources are: (1) the reports of the first explorers, the contemporaneous accounts of the early explorations, and the maps of the old cartographers; (2) the grants made by various European powers for their colonies, — especially the English charters; (3) treaties defining international boundaries; (4) decisions of the English Privy Council on contested boundaries, and of international courts of arbitration; and (5) the statutes of the United States establishing territories and admitting states.

Several books contain descriptions of the physical characteristics of the country and their influence on men of European origin. Among them may be mentioned the works of Professors Whitney and Shaler, both having the title The United States. The more important works dealing with the territorial development are Winsor's various contributions in his Columbus, Cartier, and Mississippi, and in the Narrative and Critical History. Professor Hinsdale has done good work in this field, especially in his Old Northwest; and the government publications connected with the names of Gannett and Donaldson contain many valuable suggestions and documents, which should, however, in every case be verified. In the general histories, such as Bancroft, Hildreth, McMaster, and Henry Adams, may be found elaborate discussions of boundary and other territorial questions. The larger state histories and historical society reports contain many important discussions of these and kindred subjects.

Besides the treatment of the subject in the general histories (especially Hildreth), the following special authorities may be mentioned :

Bioren and Duane, Laws of the United States . . . including many other valuable . . . Documents. 5 vols. Phila., Bioren, 1815. — Usually cited as "Duane's Laws."

Thomas Donaldson, The Public Domain. Third edition. Washington, Government Printing Office, 1884. — Reprint of House Miscellaneous Documents, 47 Cong., 2 sess., Pt. 4, No. 45.

The Existing Laws of the United States of a general and permanent character and relating to the Survey and Disposition of the Public Domain. Washington, Government Printing Office, 1884. — House Misc. Docs., 47 Cong., 2 sess., Pt. I, No. 45.

Laws of the United States exhibiting the Entire Legislation of Congress upon which the Public Land Titles in each State have depended. 2 vols. Washington, Government Printing Office, 1884. — House of Representatives, House Misc. Docs., 47 Cong., 2 sess., Pt. II, No. 45.

Henry Gannett, Boundaries of the United States and of the several States and Territories. Washington, 1885. — Reprint from United States Geological Survey, Bulletin, No. 13.

Burke Aaron Hinsdale, Bounding the Original United States. — Reprint from Magazine of Western History, II, 401-423, Sept., 1885.

Burke Aaron Hinsdale, The Old Northwest: with a View of the Thirteen Colonies as Constituted by the Royal Charters. N.Y., MacCoun, 1891.

Walter Bell Scaife, America: Its Geographical History. Baltimore, 1892.

Justin Winsor, Narrative and Critical History of America. 8 vols. Boston, Houghton, 1886-89. — Especially VII, 527-562.

§ 21 a. Physical Geography of America.

Physical geography and geology are intimately connected and much geographical matter is to be found in the publications of national and state geological surveys. The reports of state surveys are easily found in libraries under the name of the state; the more recent publications generally giving the best material. National surveys were for a number of years conducted under various governmental bureaus; their work was confined to the western part of the continent. The most important of these were Hayden's Survey (United States Geological and Geographical Survey of the Territories) whose geographical results are contained in Annual Reports (1869-79); Wheeler's Survey (United States Geographical Surveys West of the One Hundredth Meridian), Powell's Survey (United States Geographical and Geological Survey of the Rocky Mountain Region), King's Survey (United States Geological Exploration of the Fortieth Parallel). The reports of each of these three organizations were published in a series of volumes (Vol. I of Wheeler's Survey contains an analytical account of all explorations west of the Mississippi River, from 1500 to 1800). In 1879 these separate surveys were discontinued, and the United States Geological Survey was organized. It publishes Annual Reports, Bulletins, and Monographs, of which an analytical bibliography (1879-92) is contained in Bulletins, No. 100. The following bibliographical bulletins of the Survey also deserve mention: A Dictionary of Altitudes of the United States (Bulletins, No. 76); Record of North American Geology (Bulletins, Nos. 44, 75, 91, 99); A Catalogue of Geological Maps of America (Bulletins, No. 7). Much geographical material is also to be found in the American Geologist, published monthly at Minneapolis; the Journal of Geology, published semi-quarterly at Chicago; and the National Geographic Society's National Geographic Magazine, published at Washington.

Upon the basis of the geography of the country, its physiography, references will be found in §§ 21 b-21 e below. The following books will also be found serviceable :

W. M. Davis, C. F. King, and G. L. Collie, Report on Governmental Maps for Use in Schools. N.Y., Holt, 1894.

William Morris Davis, Geographical Illustrations. Cambridge, 1893. — Suggestions for teaching physical geography, based on the physical features of New England.

John William Draper, History of the American Civil War. 3 vols. N.Y., Harpers, 1867-70. — At Vol. I, 39-62.

Jedediah Morse, American Universal Geography. 2 parts. Boston. First edition, 1793; sixth edition, 1812.

National Geographic Monographs. N.Y., American Book Co.

Jacob Horace Patton, National Resources of the United States. N.Y., Appleton, 1888.

Friedrich Ratzel, Die Vereinigten Staaten von Nord-Amerika. 2 vols. München, 1878.

N. S. Shaler, Nature and Man in America. N.Y., 1891.

N. S. Shaler, editor, The United States. 2 vols. N.Y., 1894.

William D. Whitney, The United States. Boston, Little. Vol. I, 1889; Supplement, 1894.

§ 21 b. Physical Maps of North America.

The data for a complete physical map of the United States do not yet exist. Henry Gannett, in his essay on the Maps of the United States (Washington, National Geographical Society, 1892), points out the sources. The United States Geological Survey has in progress a topographical map to serve as a basis for a geological map on the scales of one, two, and four miles to the inch. Several hundred sheets have been issued, and several hundred more will be needed to complete the map. The states of Massachusetts, Rhode Island, and New Jersey alone have published serviceable contour maps of their own confines, and there is a somewhat inaccurate map of New Hampshire. Of most of these, separate sheets can be had. Davis, King, and Collie, in their Report on Governmental Maps for Use in Schools, suggest the sheets most useful for the purpose of teaching geography.

The United States Geological Survey has issued four very useful maps. (1) The most beautiful is the United States Relief Map, printed in several shades of brown; (2) the United States Contour Map, giving the contour lines in brown, is a more useful map; and (3) a map of the same size as these (28×17 inches) but without title, and showing only land and water, is most serviceable for the filling in of historical data; (4) a small map ($15\frac{1}{2} \times 10$), similar in other respects to the map just mentioned, is well adapted to desk use. These maps were compiled by Henry Gannett and issued under the direction of Major Powell.

The Survey has also issued a map of the United States in nine sheets on the scale of forty miles to an inch. The names and political boundaries are in black, the contours in brown, the water in blue. This is an admirable map for wall reference in the class-room. In the census publications there are some similar maps, especially in Statistics of the Population of the United States at the Tenth Census, Frontispiece, and Map No. 19.

The authors of this work have published for desk use a Smaller Outline Map of the United States ($16\frac{1}{4} \times 10\frac{1}{4}$ inches), Boston, Heath, 1886. Also through the same publishers an Outline Map of the United States (4 ft. \times 6 ft. 9 in.) in four sheets. This large map was designed as a basis for a series of special manuscript maps to illustrate exercises in history.

In the recent school histories (§ 18 a) are usually to be found colored maps in relief, based on the government maps. A similar one is in the Epoch Maps, No. 1. The two most valuable physical wall maps are the following:

[Steinwehr], Case's Map of the United States, the British Provinces, Mexico, and Part of the West Indies. Hartford, Case, 1893. $60\frac{1}{2} \times 60\frac{5}{8}$ inches.

United States Land Office, Map of the United States and Territories with Adjacent Parts of Canada and Mexico. Washington, Land Office, 1886. — This excellent wall map may be had from the Land Office for \$1.25, unmounted. Size, $62\frac{3}{4} \times 28\frac{3}{4}$ inches.

Of the two, "Case's" is the better for school use. There is also a series of school relief maps published by the School Supply Co. on a distorted scale, one being on the United States, and one on North America; but there is no evidence of their accuracy.

§ 21 c. Historical Maps.

Historical maps abound, but they are for the most part inaccurate. Of the school histories Johnston's (larger) contains the best and most carefully prepared; next to this perhaps Thomas's; Scudder's History has very clear and beautiful maps. Winsor's works all contain abundant reproductions of contemporary maps, and are a storehouse for cartographers.

There is a great need of an elaborate historical atlas of North America, worked out from the documentary sources, as illustrated by contemporary maps. At present there are only four series of historical maps of the United States outside of the ordinary histories :

Albert Bushnell Hart, Epoch Maps Illustrating American History. N.Y., Longmans, 1892. — Fourteen colored maps; the same maps appear in the three volumes of Epochs of American History.

Fletcher Willis Hewes and Henry Gannett, Scribner's Statistical Atlas of the United States. N.Y., Scribners, 1885. — Pages 31-40; Plates 12-17.

Townsend MacCoun, Historical Geography of the United States. Boston, Silver, 1889. — Reprint substantially of the maps in Labberton.

There is also a work which neither of the authors has seen :

Lucien H. Smith, Historical and Chronological Atlas of the United States. Washington, 1881.

§ 21 d. Sources of Historical Geography.

The advanced student of the subject must search for his material first of all in the various patents and charters, English, Spanish, Portuguese, French, Dutch, Swedish, and Russian. The principal English patents have been collected in Ben Perley Poore's Charters and Constitutions (see § 30). Many of the Dutch and Swedish documents are to be found in O'Callaghan's Documentary History of the State of New York; the French grants of Louisiana are in Gayarré's Histoire de la Louisiane. The Canadian documents may be found through the compiler of the Canadian Archives. Care should be taken in all these cases to keep as near as possible to the originals, as imperfect texts and translations are not uncommon.

For the treaties of partition and delimitation among the various European nations from 1492 up to 1895, the best collections are the following :

Recueil des Traitez de Paix, de Trêve, . . . et d'autres Actes Publics. 4 vols. folio. Amsterdam, 1700.

George Chalmers, A Collection of Treaties between Great Britain and Other Powers. 2 vols. London, 1790.

M. J. Dumont, Corps Universel Diplomatique du Droit des Gens. Amsterdam, 1726.

Barbeyrac and Rousset, Supplément au Corps Universel Diplomatique. Amsterdam, 1739.

Guillaume de Garden, Histoire Générale des Traités de Paix. 15 vols. Paris, 1848-87.

A General Collection of Treatys. 4 vols. London, 1732.

James Watson Gerard, The Peace of Utrecht. N.Y., Putnams, 1885.

F. Schoell, Histoire Abrégée des Traités de Paix. 15 vols. Paris, 1817-18.

Christophe Guillaume de Koch, Abrégé de l'Histoire des Traités de Paix. 4 vols. Basle, 1796-97.

Charles de Martens et Ferdinand de Cussy, Traités et Conventions Diplomatiques. 7 vols. Leipzig, 1846-57.

Georges Frédéric de Martens and others, Recueil de Traités des Puissances et états de l'Europe, 1761-1893. 74 vols. Göttingen, 1817-93.

All the treaties to which the United States was a party are in the official volume, Treaties and Conventions. Internal colonial boundaries must be ascertained from the original grants, the Colonial records (§ 29), and the decisions of the Privy Council. Internal boundaries within the United States are defined usually by an act of Congress (Statutes at Large). Frequently they are described in presidential proclamations, of which there is no complete collection. Controversies between states have almost always been subjects for investigation by Congress, and in such cases they are described in the Congressional Documents,—or they have given rise to suits before the Supreme Court of the United States, and the decisions will be found in the Reports. There are also many monographs and separate reports on these topics which will be found under the topical readings in Parts II and III of this Guide.

In addition to the works which attempt to give a general summary of a longer or shorter period, there is a body of literature devoted to special topics which run all the way through American history. Many such works are an elaborate study of a very limited field. Others sweep over several centuries and have the dignity of standard histories.

The monographs have commonly been produced under the auspices of some historical society (§ 31) or of a university. The Johns Hopkins Studies in Historical and Political Science, the Columbia Studies in History, Economics, and Public Law, the Harvard Historical Studies, and the publications of the Universities of Michigan, Wisconsin, and Nebraska have been the means of bringing out carefully prepared books on American history. In the Papers of the American Historical Association are also to be found some valuable monographs. This kind of literature is on the increase, and as yet there is no convenient guide to it.

Akin to this form of historical writing is the coöperative history, of which the great examples are the Memorial History of Boston and the Narrative and Critical History of America, both edited by Justin Winsor; the Memorial History of New York, edited by James Grant Wilson; and The United States, edited by N. S. Shaler. The recent editions of the encyclopædias (§ 17) with their signed articles have adopted the same system. Below is a list of some of the more useful works of this class; others will be found in Parts II and III of this Guide.

§ 22 a. Brief List of Works on Special Topics.

William B. Weedon, Economic and Social History of New England. 2 vols. Boston, 1890.

§ 23. State and Local Histories.

Successful attempts have been made of late years to arouse interest among school children and college students in the history of their own state and town. It is hence desirable that every good school library should have a set of all available books on the local history; the state histories are also often sources for the study of national history or of special topics. Two series of brief state histories are in progress: the American Commonwealth series, edited by H. E. Scudder, and the Story of the States; and there are older and more complete works on nearly all of the states. County and town histories abound; but there is little good literature on the history of cities. The following list is arranged alphabetically by states; books on important cities and important books on local history being grouped under the state in which the city or town is situated. Unless otherwise noted, additional material will be found on most of the states in the publications of the historical societies (§ 31).

[Frederick B. Perkins], Check List for American Local History. (Boston Public Library, Bulletin, October, 1875, and foll.)

Alabama.

§ 24. Books of Travel.

Our knowledge of the inner life of the past is based to a considerable extent on accounts by travelers of what they saw while on their journeyings. Perhaps it would be better to regard these books not so much as descriptions of what actually passed before the tourist's eyes, as descriptions of what the narrator thought he saw. We are all aware of the deficiency of vision of later visitors; there is no reason to suppose that earlier writers were better fitted to observe what was going on around them or to understand the genius of the people whose manners they depicted. A traveler also naturally notes the peculiar things he sees and thus gives a distorted picture at best. These books must be used with the greatest caution and checked in every possible way by reference to recorded fact. They are sometimes indispensable, however, to light up an otherwise dreary story, and some of them are good reading.

§ 25. Biographies.

Biographies stand midway between sources and secondary histories in so far as they contain letters and other material. The literature of American history is rich in such works, of an elaborate and painstaking kind; and of late years several series of brief biographies have been published which are really little political histories of the period covered by the public life of the characters described. Marshall's Washington and Curtis's Daniel Webster are illustrations of the first class. The most useful brief biographies are the following volumes of the American Statesmen series: Lodge's Washington and Webster; Morse's Jefferson, John Quincy Adams, and Lincoln; Sumner's Jackson; Von Holst's Calhoun; Schurz's Henry Clay. In the Makers of America series may be mentioned Sumner's Robert Morris and Barrett Wendell's Cotton Mather. Few of the collections of biographies are of much value: Sparks's American Biography, Van Santvoord's Lives of the Chief Justices, and J. S. Jenkins's Lives of the Governors of New York are exceptions. Good dictionaries of biography are Allen's, Drake's, and Lanman's works (see § 17); and Harper's Cyclopædia of American Biography. To this list should be added Alexander Johnston's admirable biographical articles in Lalor's Cyclopædia.

A few of the more useful biographies are enumerated below : the arrangement is alphabetical by the subjects of the works (not by authors) :

John Quincy Adams and Charles Francis Adams, The Life of John Adams. 2 vols. Phila., 1871.

§ 26. Periodicals.

Much valuable material, both secondary and original, is buried in the sets of American periodicals. Few of them are wholly devoted to historical matters, but many contain occasional articles. Out of the following list of periodicals the most serviceable in an historical library would be the American Historical Review, Atlantic Monthly, Century (especially for the Civil War), Democratic Review, Forum, North American Review (old series to 1878), Magazine of American History, Political Science Quarterly, Scribner's Magazine, and the Yale Review.

Until the publication of Poole's Index to Periodicals such matter was almost inaccessible. At present, by means of this aid and Jones's Index to Legal Periodicals, it is easy to assemble material either as a basis of historical knowledge or for topical work. The value of a library is much increased by these publications, including the supplements to Poole. There are also special indexes to Harper's, North American Review, and the New York Nation.

Of the earlier periodicals the most valuable for its historical material is Niles's Register (1811-46); for the last thirty years the New York Nation (since 1865); the North American Review fills the gap between. The only periodical wholly devoted to American history has been the Magazine of American History, now discontinued: but, in October, 1895, appeared the first number of the American Historical Review, which is intended to be a national clearing-house for historical writers and readers. The Political Science Quarterly and the Yale Review have also much historical matter. For a record of current events and criticisms Public Opinion is useful. The illustrated magazines have some historical articles frequently gathered into later volumes. The Forum and North American Review deal rather with current political and social questions than with historical questions.

§ 27. Newspapers.

Newspapers are difficult to use for historical purposes, and their record of events is apt to be imperfect or distorted by the political views of the editor. Early newspapers, especially in colonial times, had very little important news in them, and are useful principally for the unintentional information of advertisements and items. Newspapers of the present day are hard to handle, owing to their bulk and to the lack of systematic arrangement. In general such material ought to be used rather for illustration and corroboration; it is not safe to make newspapers the sole, or even the principal, dependence for an historical narrative. The system of newspaper clippings employed in some schools has the serious drawback of failing to instil discrimination in the selection of material.

The following books about American newspapers may be found suggestive :

Joseph T. Buckingham, Specimens of Newspaper Literature. 2 vols. Boston, 1850.

Frederic Hudson, History of Journalism in the United States, from 1690 to 1872. N.Y., 1873.

S. N. D. North, History and Present Condition of the Newspaper and Periodical Press in the United States. (Publications of the Tenth Census.) Washington, 1884.

Isaiah Thomas, History of Printing in America. 2 vols. Worcester, 1810. Second edition. 2 vols. Albany, 1874.

A most useful newspaper for historical purposes is Niles's Register, in which appear significant extracts from a variety of the papers of the day. The New York Tribune and New York Times represent the two sides from about 1840 to 1865. The Nation at that date (1865) began its valuable weekly review of politics. Recently, Public Opinion has revived Niles's system of extracts from other papers. Out of the thousands of newspapers in the United States the following brief list includes some of the most serviceable. They are arranged in the order of their first appearance.

§ 28. Printed Sources.

The ultimate source of our knowledge of American history is the record made at the time of the events described. In part we have official records — conscious history ; and the founders of the English Colonies, especially in New England, were well aware of the value which posterity would place on their account of the planting of the New World. Winsor in the Narrative and Critical History (VIII, 426) enumerates the principal publications, including the colonial records, which are among the most precious of our documents. Those of Massachusetts and Connecticut, Maryland, Pennsylvania, and New Hampshire have been published by the respective states ; and the two series edited by O'Callaghan called the Documents relating to the History of New York and Documentary History of New York are substantially records of that colony. Side by side with these must be mentioned the historical narratives of Bradford, Winthrop, Mather, and Hutchinson on Massachusetts history — a kind of material peculiar to Massachusetts.

The records of the New England Confederation are reprinted in the Plymouth and Connecticut records. Since 1774 we have continuous Journals for the Congresses of the United States. For the Convention of 1787 there is the Journal and also Madison's notes on the debates. From 1789 to 1837 we have reprints of contemporary newspaper reports of debates in Congress; and since 1833 an official stenographic report, the Congressional Globe and Congressional Record. There are several elaborate series of public documents published by authority of Congress; of these the earlier ones were gathered up and republished in the folio State Papers. To all these documents there are elaborate indexes (§ 16). The Supreme Court Reports contain the decisions of that court. The ordinances of Congress before 1788 are not printed except in the Journals: but since 1788 there is a series of Statutes at Large containing the laws and treaties of the United States (§ 30).

Few states have printed sets of documents, and none have official reports of legislative proceedings. Nor are the town and city transactions in print, except in a few cases. On the other hand few countries have such abundant sets of works of statesmen. Those of Franklin, Washington, Hamilton and Jefferson have been twice published in different forms. These works contain state papers and correspondence, and are well adapted for use in schools and colleges. Many public men have also put together their experiences and reminiscences into autobiographies and recollections — of these the most valuable are John Quincy Adams's Memoirs, Franklin's Autobiography, Benton's Thirty Year's View, McCullough's Men and Measures, and Josiah Quincy's Figures of the Past (§ 32).

§ 29. Colonial Records.

The old saying, "As the twig is bent so the tree inclines," applies with great force to the history of American political and legal institutions. He that would have a true and accurate insight into the institutions and political development of the United States since the inauguration of President Washington must first gain a thorough comprehension of the institutions of colonial days. This knowledge can be best acquired by an actual perusal of the legislation and records of the colonial epoch. To facilitate this study the following list of sources is given. It is not intended to be a complete bibliography; but is designed to include the most valuable works which may be found in our large libraries.

General.

The Statutes of the Realm. Printed by Command of His Majesty King George III. 12 vols. [London], 1810-28. — Extends to the end of the reign of Queen Anne.

Danby Pickering, The Statutes [of England and Great Britain] at Large from Magna Charta to ... 1761. Cambridge, 1762. With a Continuation, edited by Pickering and others, Cambridge and, later, London, 1762-1869. 109 vols., and a good Index in three vols. — This set is always cited as Pickering's Statutes.

Nicholas Trott, The Laws of the British Plantations in America, relating to the Church and the Clergy, Religion and Learning. London, 1721. — Imperfect, but useful as pointing the way.

An Abridgement of the Laws in Force and Use in Her Majesty's Plantations. London, 1704.

John Brown Dillon, Oddities of Colonial Legislation in America. Indianapolis, 1879.

François Xavier Martin, A Collection of the Statutes of the Parliament of England in Force in the State of North Carolina. Newbern, 1792. — Most of these laws were in force in the other colonies as well as in North Carolina.

W. Noël Sainsbury, editor, Calendar of [British] State Papers, Colonial Series (1574-1676). 9 vols. London, 1860-93.

J. Redington and R. A. Roberts, editors, Calendar of Home Office, Papers of the Reign of George III (1760-72). 3 vols. London, 1878-81. — Among the other volumes of the "Rolls Series," which the student of American history will find helpful, are the Domestic Papers, the Carew Manuscripts, etc.

[John Almon], A Collection of Papers, relative to the Dispute between Great Britain and America, from 1764 to 1775. London, 1777. — Always cited as The Prior Documents.

§ 30. United States Records.

Under the Constitution both Houses of Congress are obliged to keep a Journal; and a statement of receipts and expenditures must also be made. In the course of years many other documents have come to be regularly published. Most of these publications for the current year may be had by applying to the member of Congress from one's district; sometimes back sets may also be had, by gift or purchase. These are among the most valuable sources accessible to students of American history.

The manuscripts of the Journals from 1774 to 1788 are in the State Department at Washington. No full and accurate printed edition exists. The two titles below (§ 30 a) show what exists in print.

Indexes to the Journals and Debates are enumerated in § 16 c.

The laws are printed in annual volumes, and they are also to be found in the Appendices to the records of debates (§ 30 b). The standard editions, authoritative in the courts, are enumerated below (§ 30 c). Volume VIII of the Statutes at Large contains an index to the laws up to 1845. There is also a Synoptical Index to the Laws and Treaties, 1789-1851. Boston, 1882. An index in another form is: F. C. Brightly, Analytical Digest of the Laws of the United States, 1789-1857. Phila., 1858; and the indexes to the Revised Statutes cover all laws still in force.

Indexes to the Documents are enumerated in § 16 e.

To the decisions of the Federal Courts the most convenient guide is: Robert Desty, Constitution of the United States. San Francisco, 1887; it is arranged in the order of the clauses of the Federal Constitution. The commentators refer freely to cases. There are also three "Digests" to Supreme Court Decisions: Jonathan Kendrick Kinney, Digest of the Decisions of the Supreme Court. 2 vols. Boston, 1886; Henry G. Danforth, Digest of the United States Supreme Court Reports. 2 vols. Albany and N.Y., 1885; H. D. Clarke, Hand-Book of all the Decisions of the Supreme Court. Rochester, 1892.

§ 32. Works of American Statesmen.

In this and the following section (§ 33) it has not been thought necessary to repeat the titles of the books on statesmen and worthies of the colonial period which have already been given under § 25. The letters and reports of the men of the earlier time are often to be found in monographs dealing with a particular topic, in the proceedings and collections of learned societies, or built into a biography, told, as the phrase is, in the subject's "own words."

§ 35. Manuscript Sources.

Mr. Winsor has devoted an important part of the general bibliographical appendix to the Narrative and Critical History (Vol. VIII, 413) to a list of the available collections of manuscripts. The State Department in Washington has the original documents of the Continental Congress, the Confederation, and the Federal Convention of 1787, with the manuscripts of the Declaration of Independence, the Articles of Confederation, and the Constitution. It has also the manuscript rolls of statutes and treaties made since 1789. In those archives are also deposited valuable parts of the papers of Washington, Madison, Jefferson, Franklin, Monroe, Hamilton, and the manuscripts collected, but not printed, by Peter Force. In the War Department are the little known archives of the Confederate States of America, including the Journals of the two Houses of the Confederate Congress. Of the State Archives that of Massachusetts may be mentioned as especially rich. The various state historical societies have in many cases valuable collections of family papers. Frequently, however, important sets of manuscripts have been scattered or destroyed for want of an appreciation of their value. The letters and especially the diaries of any person who has been in public life have a permanent value, and should be carefully preserved.

In using manuscript material great care must be taken to identify each piece, to ascertain its date, and to be sure that it is really by the person to whom it is ascribed. In some cases there are two manuscript copies of the same letter by the same hand, as in the famous letters of Washington supposed to have been re-written by his editor Sparks, till the two originals were compared.

Historical events and movements are frequently fixed in the memory by the perusal of books which may be inaccurate in themselves, especially as to details, but which, nevertheless, leave a permanent and reasonably correct impression on the mind of the reader. Thus Keats's famous sonnet, in which he made the Conqueror of Mexico discover the Pacific Ocean, could not well be less in accordance with the historical fact; but it enforces the charm of discovery more intensely than the reading of many original letters and reports. There are critics, however, who think that when, as in this case, the facts are well known and easily to be discovered, it is the business of the story-teller or verse-maker to know what actually happened sufficiently well to make the historical basis of his story reasonably accurate. A famous American writer once said that the poet was indebted to history for the general fact only, around which he could build up his own imaginative work. Perhaps it is true that the novel-writer or poet produces the best and truest work when he is unhampered by the details of the real story and may aim to create only a general impression which shall be true to the general trend of history. Mrs. Austin carries the Mayflower's shallop into a cove in Clark's Island, where the narrative of Bradford forbids the idea that the shallop was; the plan of the story, the author has said, made it necessary for the boat to be at that particular place at the precise moment, and the spirit of the explorers is not affected by the deviation. Longfellow's Miles Standish would be painfully inaccurate and anachronistic as history; but he adds a man to our affectionate acquaintance. Just how far it is safe to accept a picture of which the details are not true to the time, — whether the "general reader" of Mrs. Austin's tale or Longfellow's poem gains a truer and more lasting impression of the spirit of Pilgrim colonization than he or she would obtain from Doyle, or Bancroft, or still better from Bradford's epic itself, — is a question which the authors of the Guide do not answer. Certain it is that for all pupils and students of American history such books are useful in connection with accurate text-books, other secondary accounts, and especially as an adjunct to a moderate use of the sources which tell the same tale more simply.

In the following lists of novels and poems no attempt is made to separate the works based on sound study from those which may justly be classed with fiction. They are inserted as additional and subordinate illustrative material. Nor can the lists claim to be complete; the principle of choice is to give at least examples of those standard authors who have woven out of American history, and to add some books from obscure writers which are known to have given pleasure or to have aroused interest. Other titles can be found in the first five works noted in § 36 a, especially in the Chronological Index issued by the Boston Public Library; the third edition, printed under the editorship of Mr. Whitney, is the more complete; the earlier editions, prepared by Mr. Winsor, are likely to be more useful. In these publications, novels, poems, and ballads are grouped together under the head of "fiction."

IV. WORKING LIBRARIES.

§ 37. Necessity of Working Libraries.

No proper work can be done in history by the use of a single book. The study resembles those scientific subjects, such as botany and physics, in which laboratory practice is an essential part of the instruction from the very beginning. The principle to be observed is that the teacher's part is not to deal out knowledge, but to aid the pupils in getting their knowledge for themselves. Digests are not nutriment, and a text-book is to be considered an aid and not an end. Hence, if history is really to be taught at all, in every school there must be some collection of books. It need not be large in order to get benefit from it; but it must be used.

In order to secure the use of a working library, it must be accessible all the school time, and if possible be made available at other hours. A shelf in the schoolroom, where the books stand in view all day, is the most convenient arrangement. Larger collections may need to be kept in a particular room, but it should be open as long as the building is open; and if the machinery of drawing books out and registering them seems necessary, it should be made as simple as possible. Pupils should be encouraged to carry books home over night. At the same time should be inculcated that reverence for the clean and unsoiled page which is a part of every proper education. To injure or to use up another's book should be included among the vices; while a child may be taught to make intelligent marginal notes and cross references on his own copy.

If the books are more than a hundred, some kind of catalogue is almost indispensable, and should be conspicuously placed. Large libraries should of course have two card catalogues, one by authors and another by subjects; and the making of a school catalogue may be an excellent experience for children.

College libraries have usually a system of cataloguing and a permanent librarian. Here it is of much consequence that the books on history be classified and kept together, and, if all the books are not open and accessible, a select historical library should be placed where it can be consulted at any time ; and the use should be made as free and unrestricted as possible.

§ 38. Cheap Libraries.

The multiplication of brief but well-written books on American history makes it possible to select a few books which, taken together, cover the whole field of American history in some systematic fashion. In making up the lists below, care has been taken to include, so far as possible, books which balance each other, either by treating different phases of American history or by taking different sides on the same general question.

§ 38 a. Smallest Possible Collection.

Two good text-books selected out of the list in § 18. For example : H. E. Scudder, History of the United States for Schools; A. C. Thomas, History of the United States.

§ 38 b. A Five-Dollar Collection.

Edward Channing, The United States of America, 1765-1865. (Cambridge Historical series.) N.Y., Macmillan & Co., 1896.

John Fiske, School History of the United States. Boston, Houghton, 1894.

T. W. Higginson, Young Folks' History of the United States. N.Y., Longmans.

Alexander Johnston, History of the United States for Schools. N.Y., Holt, 1889.

Mary S. Sheldon and Earl Barnes, Studies in American History. Boston, Heath, 1893.

Albert Bushnell Hart, Epoch Maps illustrating American History. N.Y., Longmans, 1893.

§ 38 c. A Ten-Dollar Collection.

Benjamin Franklin, Autobiography. — To be found in many different issues.

✦ Henry Cabot Lodge, George Washington. 2 vols. Boston, Houghton, 1892.

John T. Morse, Jr., Abraham Lincoln. 2 vols. Boston, Houghton.

✦ Carl Schurz, Henry Clay. 2 vols. Boston, Houghton.

✦ Goldwin Smith, The United States, an Outline of Political History. (1492-1871.) N.Y., Macmillan, 1893.

Thwaites, Hart, and Wilson, Epochs of American History. 3 vols. N.Y., Longmans, 1894.

The combination of the two collections enumerated in § 38 b and § 38 c would make a good fifteen-dollar collection.

§ 38 d. A Twenty-Dollar Collection.

American History Leaflets. N.Y., A. Lovell, 1892-95.

American History series. N.Y., Scribners. Volumes published: George P. Fisher, The Colonies; Wm. M. Sloane, The French War and the Revolution; Francis A. Walker, The Making of the Nation.

American Statesmen. Boston, Houghton. ✦ H. C. Lodge, George Washington. 2 vols.; John T. Morse, Jr., Abraham Lincoln. 2 vols.

✦ Edward Channing, The United States of America, 1765-1865. N.Y., Macmillan & Co., 1896.

Epochs of American History. N.Y., Longmans. Reuben G. Thwaites, The Colonies; Albert Bushnell Hart, Formation of the Union; Woodrow Wilson, Division and Reunion.

Benjamin Franklin, Autobiography.

T. W. Higginson, Larger History of the United States. N.Y., Harpers, 1886.

✦ Alexander Johnston, History of American Politics. N.Y., Holt, 1885. Old South Leaflets. Boston, Heath.

Josiah Quincy, Figures of the Past. Boston, 1883.

Mary Sheldon Barnes and Earl Barnes, Studies in American History. Boston, Heath, 1893.

✦ Goldwin Smith, The United States, an Outline of Political History. 1492-1871. N.Y., Macmillan & Co., 1893.

✦ Edward Stanwood, A History of Presidential Elections. Boston, 1892.

Simon Sterne, Constitutional and Political History of the United States. N.Y., 1889.

Barrett Wendell, Cotton Mather. N.Y., Dodd, 1891.

§ 38 e. A Fifty-Dollar Collection.

In addition to the books enumerated in the twenty-dollar collection the following additional volumes, costing about thirty dollars may be mentioned :

Charles Francis Adams, Three Episodes of Massachusetts History. 2 vols. Boston, Houghton, 1893.

William Bradford, History of Plymouth Plantation. (Mass. Hist. Soc.) Boston.

Judson K. Landon, The Constitutional History and Government of the United States. Boston, Houghton, 1889.

American Statesmen. Boston, Houghton. † John T. Morse, Jr., Thomas Jefferson ; H. C. Lodge, Alexander Hamilton ; Lodge, Daniel Webster ; W. G. Sumner, Andrew Jackson ; † Carl Schurz, Henry Clay. 2 vols. ; † John T. Morse, Jr., John Quincy Adams ; † H. Von Holst, John C. Calhoun.

J. A. Doyle, The English in America. 3 vols. N.Y., Holt.

Henry Cabot Lodge, The English Colonies in North America. N.Y., Harpers, 1881.

† James Schouler, History of the United States. 5 vols. N.Y., Dodd, 1893.

John Fiske, The Discovery of America. 2 vols. Boston, Houghton, 1893.

§ 38 f. A Hundred-Dollar Collection.

In addition to the list in §§ 38 d and 38 e, a good history of one's own state (§ 23) and the following works may be added :

† John B. McMaster, History of the People of the United States. 4 vols. N.Y., Appleton, 1883-95.

† H. Von Holst, Constitutional and Political History of the United States. 8 vols. Chicago, Callaghan, 1877-91.

James F. Rhodes, History of the United States since 1850. 3 vols. N.Y., Harpers, 1890-95.

James Freeman Clarke, Anti-Slavery Days. N.Y., 1884.

Lucius E. Chittenden, Personal Reminiscences (1860-90). N.Y., 1893.

- W. E. H. Lecky, History of England. Vols. III and IV. N.Y., Holt.
 Thomas Jefferson, Notes on Virginia. — Many editions.
 Hugh McCullough, Men and Measures of Half a Century. N.Y., 1888.
 Josiah Quincy, Figures of the Past from the Leaves of Old Journals.
 Boston, 1883.
 Nathan Sargent, Public Men and Events. 2 vols. Phila., 1875.
 John C. Ropes, Story of the Civil War. 3 vols. N.Y., Putnams, 1895.

§ 39. A Good Working Library.

The small collections above described have few sources in them, and ought to be supplemented by printed records, by biographies containing letters and other original material, and by the works of statesmen, and local and special histories. From the lists of classified books given above (§§ 23–36) many additional titles may be drawn. At the beginning of each section will be found some hints as to the books most desirable. Among them should be included :

- (1) Atlases of American historical geography, and some of the descriptive books and sources.
- (2) A good supply of text-books, both school and college.
- (3) Additional general histories mentioned in § 20.
- (4) Some of the special histories, especially Taussig's Tariff History.
- (5) The local histories of the state and place in which the teacher or reader lives (§ 23).
- (6) Biographies of all the Presidents, and also of John Winthrop, Hutchinson, Sam Adams, Patrick Henry, Franklin, Hamilton, John Randolph, Gallatin, Henry Clay, Webster, Calhoun, Benton, Seward, Chase, Sumner, Blaine, Davis.
- (7) A few of the reviews containing historical matter, especially the Nation, and the American Historical Review.
- (8) If possible some sets of colonial records, which may be obtained at reasonable prices at the second-hand book stores.
- (9) A set of the Annals of Congress, Congressional Debates, Congressional Globe, and Congressional Record; the two last may sometimes be had through a senator or member of the House of Representatives.

(10) The Statutes at Large and Treaties and Conventions (§§ 30 c, 30 d).

Lists of desirable books will be found in another form in the "General Readings" (§ 56).

§ 40. Collateral Use of Public Libraries.

The large number of public libraries in the United States makes possible careful work in history even in schools which have small or ill-selected libraries. One method is to recommend pupils to draw books which will be useful in connection with their study. For this purpose it is very desirable to cooperate with the librarian in preparing reading-lists, including only material in the library, and illustrating the regular lessons. Good descriptive books, travels, and historical novels may thus be indicated, as well as histories and biographies. The admirable Reference Lists prepared by W. E. Foster, librarian of the Providence Public Library, are illustrations of what may be done to bring readers and books into relations with each other over subjects of current interest. For school use, however, this system has the disadvantage that the nimblest pupil withdraws the most valuable book, and the others cannot use it till he returns it.

Perhaps a better method is for the school to secure the privilege of drawing out a certain number of books, and keeping them for a definite time in the school building as a special reference library. This system has the advantage of keeping together for general use the set of most useful books. One of the reasons for placing the Cambridge English High School near the Public Library was that the use of books would thus be facilitated. Without any such formal privilege being granted, it is easy to arrange that children, holders of cards, shall unite their drawings, so as to make up a reference set, to be used by the whole class so long as the library regulations permit the books to remain out. In many cases public libraries will purchase sets of books on American history, with special reference to their usefulness for school work. Another advantage of a good public library should be that it can give the pupils an opportunity to learn the use of catalogues, special bibliographies, and other keys to literature. (§ 16.)

§ 41. Use of Great Libraries.

A few favored cities and some universities have the advantage of great public or endowed libraries, containing rich historical literature and preserving extensive sets of printed records, works of public men, and files of periodicals. The first duty of a student or reader in such a library is to make himself familiar with the catalogue, so that he may, without loss of time, go straight to the authorities on any subject he may be studying. A few hours spent in mastering the intricacies of a printed or card subject catalogue will make the whole of the historical way smooth. Next the student should learn the arrangement and use of special aids such as Poole's Index and Fletcher's A. L. A. Index to General Literature. The best printed catalogues should be examined also, such as Leypoldt's American Catalogue and the catalogues of the Boston Athenæum, Peabody Institute of Baltimore, and Brooklyn Public Library. This familiarity may most easily be gained by following out some specific subject through the various bibliographical aids. The Special Report on Bibliography, described below (§ 69), is an illustration of this method.

The next duty of the student is to make himself familiar with the general literature of American history. If he have a select set of works on the subject at his disposal, he should go through a considerable number of the books, examining them sufficiently to acquaint himself with their aim and arrangement. Then he should look into the sources, particularly the colonial records and the records of the United States government, so as to understand the principle upon which they are arranged, and the indexes and other means of getting at their contents.

All the work above described is of course only a reconnaissance, intended to prepare the way for a careful study of some part of the material thus examined, in connection with class work or private reading. A great library means not so much that the student is to read an enormous amount, as that he is to learn how to select from the mass the books or parts of books most useful to him; and especially that he may learn how to draw from the sources material for knowledge or the confirmation of knowledge gained elsewhere. Thought, selection, discrimination are most essential to the right use of great collections.

§ 42. The Reserved and "Over-Night" System.

For large classes, in schools, colleges, and universities, it is difficult to provide enough material to serve for the wants of all at once. Important books may be drawn out when most needed by the class; one copy is often insufficient, and few libraries will buy duplicates to be used freely, and perhaps worn out, by students. Much may be done by private gift to increase the copies of the most valuable books. Sometimes members of classes will give reference books at the end of their course, or classes raise a subscription or assess themselves to provide additional copies. It may be set down as an axiom that more than twenty-five students cannot use a small number of reference books to advantage. Of course in a large collection there are many alternative books; for instance, on the period of the Confederation, one may get an excellent foundation out of either Bancroft, McMaster, Fiske, Curtis, Hildreth, or Pitkin, — it is not necessary for all to read the same account, if every one reads a good narrative.

To provide as well as possible for the largest possible number of students, Mr. Justin Winsor, Librarian of Harvard University, has worked out a system of which the success has been proved by the experience of a dozen years. Out of the numerous stores of the library each instructor has the right to select such books as seem to him essential for his courses, and to have them assembled in an alcove of the reading-room, where they are entirely open and accessible, without any formality of drawing out, during the library hours. With this existence of a good working collection behind him, the instructor may safely call for a large amount of parallel reading and special written work. The only practical difficulty is the occasional hiding or carrying away of a book. The pressure for the use of particular books at a particular time is strong, and a discreditable number of volumes disappear in the course of a year. The loss is small in comparison with the advantage to the students, and concealment of a "reserved book" is considered one of the meanest of college crimes.

A further provision of the scheme adds greatly to the effectiveness of the library in cases where the reading-room cannot be used after sundown. No book thus reserved can be drawn out by any student during the day; but he has the privilege, an half-hour before the library closes, to draw a certain number of reserved books for "over-night use"; such books are returnable at nine o'clock the next morning, and neglect so to return them, if repeated, places the negligent student for a month on the "black list" of persons whose privilege is suspended. The reserved books system thus serves a double use, and promotes an intelligent use of library material. It makes the library a kind of laboratory for the "humanities."

Some instructors in smaller colleges, where the general library facilities are not ample, have established small working libraries in rooms set apart for the purpose by the college authorities. To each student in the course for which such a library is provided a key is given in return for the deposit of a small sum of money. A portion of the money thus obtained is used to replace books lost through theft or carelessness or through abuse. The interests of the students and of the library are thus made identical. This system is said to work well in some institutions.

V. CLASS EXERCISES.

§ 43. Recitations.

THE class-room is the place where the pupils' general work is to be tested. But, at the outset, teachers ought never to lose sight of the fact that repetition of the words or ideas of a text-book is a test of the memory and not of the mind. The only proper test is that which ascertains how far a pupil is able to use and apply what he knows; and in that process one is certain to find out whether he really knows anything. It is a deadening experience to have hour after hour given up in class to a recital by pupils of facts which the others either know already, or will never learn in class. The recitation is the teacher's opportunity to enforce, explain, illustrate, and amplify the lesson.

The first duty of the teacher is therefore throughout the exercise to point out what is most important in the lesson, and what is a minor matter, and thus to break up the notion that every word in the text-book deserves equal attention with every other word. Any good teacher ought to be able even to suggest omissions. The interest and opinion of the pupils may sometimes be drawn out as to the comparative importance of two events. Thus in the discussion of the Declaration of Independence it is easy to bring out the fact that the day or manner of signature is only a detail; that the essential thing at the moment was the determination then taken to separate from the home-land and to establish a new nation.

The recitation is also the place to bring out cross-relations of events, as set forth elsewhere in the text-book, or in other books. Thus, in studying the New England Confederation, the likeness between the Commissioners of the Confederation and the Congress of the later Confederation may be pointed out; the fugitive-slave clause may be compared with the similar provision of the Federal Constitution of 1787; and the insubordinate resolutions of Massachusetts may be likened to the votes of the Hartford Convention of 1814, and the Secession ordinances of 1861. This work the teacher must guide, but need not carry on alone; pupils may make pertinent suggestions, or the teacher may draw them out by skillful questioning. Illustrations may be drawn also from the history of any other country which has been studied by the class, but this should be done with the greatest care, as the conditions of problems of different ages and races are often very unlike, although on the surface appearing to be the same. With such intelligent teaching there will be no need of calling for a repetition of the words, or even the substance of the text-books. The weak, lazy, or inattentive scholar will surely be discovered.

In colleges the ordinary set recitation is an anachronism; students old enough to come to college ought not to need the stimulus of their own discussion. For them the only suitable oral exercise in history is the "quiz" (§ 46) or "conference," or some form of written exercise (§§ 65-73). If text-book recitations are necessary, it is a proof that the work done is not college work.

§ 44. Proper Use of Text-Books.

What is the advantage of a text-book, if it is not to be absorbed by the pupil? In the first place, it is to be the backbone of his knowledge, — the ridge connecting and holding firm all that comes to him from other sources. Text-books are to be studied carefully, in order to fix in the mind the principal events, so that they may be carried from the beginning of the course to the end. A certain body of facts should thus be acquired, and drilled in by constant cross-reference.

Most text-books on American history are well illustrated, and thus serve to bring home to the mind historical places and public men. The maps also ought to be — and in a few cases are — suggestive and helpful; they should be used constantly both in and out of the class-room. The best text-books are further provided with a set of select bibliographies, which will lead pupils to use other books; or contain lists of questions requiring for answer the use of additional books.

One other use of text-books is that of the "open text-book recitation," in which, with their books before them, and the privilege to turn the leaves back and forth, pupils reply to off-hand questions, including past and even future lessons. It is an exercise likely to train pupils to swift and discriminating use of books; and to keep fresh in their minds the conception that the history of the United States is one thing, and not a succession of detached episodes.

For college work the text-book has a different purpose. It should be employed not as a basis of class exercises, but as a substitute for what must otherwise be acquired from lectures. The instructor may omit the groundwork included in the text-book; and assume in his lectures and other work that so much knowledge may be taken for granted. The text-book may also serve as a guide to the parallel reading, if furnished with suitable bibliographies.

§ 45. Reviews.

Many schools waste the most valuable part of the year, the last month or more, in an elaborate review of study already pursued within too narrow limits. A proper system of teaching will secure all the good that there is in this system, without its loss of time and energy. Two such devices are thus described by a very efficient teacher in secondary schools: "The pupil is given the entire subject, for instance, the Homeric Age, the Conquest of Italy by Rome, the Early Norman Kings, the New England Colonies. To recite these 'fluents' are the special glory of the class; the brilliant recitation that holds the interest of all the pupils, although the subject is familiar, is one that is especially prized. After the 'fluent' is finished it is criticised as to matter and manner; the English, the attitude, and intonation of the reciter all coming under fire, as well as the historical matter."

The second device is thus described: "But a very important part of the work yet remains, — the fixing of the whole indelibly on the mind. This is attempted by what . . . are called 'cards,' i.e., a raking fire of short, sharp questions every morning, to which a prompt, direct answer is required, or the dread 'next,' 'next,'

'next' is heard. To fail in cards is thought a great disgrace, for they are taken up only when the subject has been most carefully explained, and failure in them is an evidence of unfaithfulness on the part of the pupil."

The essential element in both these systems is that every recitation, properly conducted, is a review of all the lessons which have gone before. It is like going up a flight of steps, from each of which one looks back over all that he has climbed. Besides the oral reviews there are several systems of written questions which will be described below (§§ 65, 66).

§ 46. The "Quiz."

For sufficiently advanced pupils the recitation may be replaced by a different sort of oral exercise, the "quiz." Here the text-book has place only as one of several authorities that may be quoted to sustain or overthrow a proposition. The object is to draw out by discussion the meaning and relations of the day's topic. For instance, instead of "hearing the class" on the witchcraft delusion, the whole body of pupils may become a sort of committee of the whole on the subject, and may discuss how far the Puritans were abreast or behind their contemporaries in other lands and other colonies as respects belief in witches; how far the evidence was worthy of credence; what kindred delusions exist in our own day, etc. Such a discussion may be made the medium of ethical teaching, of the greater effect because introduced incidentally.

One method of carrying on such a "quiz" is to assign to each member of the class some phase of the general subject, on which he is to make special preparation, so as to contribute to the discussion as often as his special topic bears upon it. In studying the slavery and secession questions, for instance, to each member of the class might be assigned a state, the attitude of which was to be considered on each successive national crisis. An assignment of the principal American statesmen might be made when going over the period of the Revolution; as each Congress or important measure came up some member of the class should be ready to describe the part of John Dickinson, or James Wilson, or Patrick Henry. Another method is to make each member of the class responsible for a particular book, so as to state the view of the author on each controversy that comes up, or to add details not elsewhere mentioned.

In college the "quiz" may approach the well-known and successful "law-school method" of the deduction of principles from a study of cases, and not of text-books. For the college students the substitute for cases must usually be the leading historians; but a skillful instructor and interested class will find plenty of material for ardent discussion over such questions as the right of the Massachusetts Bay Colony to bring over its charter, or the purport of the Virginia and Kentucky Resolutions. Now that sets of select cases in Constitutional Law are available, the principal constitutional questions — such as the annexation of Louisiana, or the legal-tender question — may be studied from actual cases, even in considerable classes.

In small and highly advanced courses it is possible to conduct a "quiz" based partly on texts and partly on personal knowledge. Young men are often gathered in the universities from many states, and have had widely varying experiences. Political and constitutional questions may be discussed in such classes by assigning to each man a state — presumably his own — or an institution, upon which he shall make himself an authority.

§ 47. Memorizing.

No improved method of teaching can do away with the necessity of memorizing certain data; but here, as elsewhere, there must be caution to select essential things. Neither the child's knowledge of history, nor his power of mind, are aroused by learning by heart the phraseology of a text-book writer. What he most needs is a list of important events, in their logical connection; the names of a few of the great characters, with determining dates; and parts of the phraseology of some of the constitutional documents. A ready use of this material, out of its connection, should be required and enforced at every opportunity, so that it may be firmly fixed in the memory as a permanent acquirement. It should be the multiplication-table of history, always at the tongue's end. The date of the settlements of Virginia, Massachusetts, or New York, and dates and succession of American Congresses and Conventions from 1754 to 1789, the names and dates of the presidents, should be as familiar as seven times nine; and the use of these dates to group current events should be as free as nine times seven. Beyond these epoch-making dates pupils should remember whatever adheres naturally to the events, but drill should be given to fixing a few dates in the mind rather than to suggesting so many that they will have no life or meaning.

The following list is a suggestion of the things best worth remembering as a basis for the study of the history of America.

§ 47 a. Discovery and Exploration.

- 1000 (about). The Norse Discoveries.
- 1492. Columbus.
 - 1493. Bull of Partition.
 - 1497. John Cabot.
 - 1513. Ponce de Leon (Florida).
 - 1513. Vasco Nuñez de Balboa (Pacific).
 - 1519-21. Cortez (Conquest of Mexico).
 - 1520. Magellan.
 - 1524. Verrazano and Gomez (Atlantic Coast).
 - 1527-36. Cabeza de Vaca (Southern United States).
 - 1531-32. The Brothers Pizarro (Conquest of Peru).
 - 1534-35. Cartier (Quebec and Montreal).
 - 1539-42. De Soto (Southern and Eastern United States).
 - 1540-41. Coronado (Southwestern United States).
 - 1578. Drake (Pacific Coast).
 - 1583. Gilbert (North Atlantic Coast).
 - 1584. Amadas and Barlow (North Carolina).
 - 1609. Hudson (Hudson's River for Dutch).
 - 1610. Hudson (Hudson's Bay for England).
 - 1615. Champlain (Lake Huron).
 - 1634. Nicolet (Lake Michigan).
 - 1673. Marquette and Joliet (Mississippi).
 - 1681. La Salle (Mississippi).

§ 47 b. Colonial History, 1604-1760.

1604. Acadia (De Monts and Champlain).
1607. Virginia (Jamestown, Captain John Smith).
1608. Quebec (Champlain).
1619. Representative Government and Slavery in Virginia.
1620. The Council for New England (Gorges).
1620. Plymouth (Mayflower Compact, William Bradford).
1630. Great Emigration to Massachusetts (Winthrop).
1632. Maryland (The Calverts, Baron Baltimore).
1635. Connecticut.
1636. Providence (Roger Williams and Religious Liberty).
1637. Rhode Island (Anne Hutchinson).
1638. New Haven.
1638-39. The "Orders" of Connecticut.
1641. Massachusetts "Body of Liberties."
1643. New England Confederation.
1649. Maryland Toleration Act.
1651. The Navigation Ordinance.
1662. Connecticut Charter.
1663. Rhode Island Charter.
1663 and 1665. The Carolina Charters.
1664. English Conquest of New Netherland.
1665. New Jersey.
1676. Bacon's Rebellion in Virginia.
1681. Pennsylvania Charter (Penn and the Quakers).
1689. Rebellions in Massachusetts, New York, and Maryland.
1691. Province Charter of Massachusetts.
1699. Louisiana.
1701. Pennsylvania Charter of Privileges.
1713. Treaty of Utrecht.
1721. Rebellion in Carolina.
1732. Georgia Charter.
1734. Trial of Zenger.

§ 47h. Significant Extracts from the Declaration of Independence.

When in the Course of human events, it becomes necessary for one people to dissolve the political bands which have connected them with another, and to assume among the powers of the earth, the separate and equal station to which the Laws of Nature and of Nature's God entitle them, a decent respect to the opinions of mankind requires that they should declare the causes which impel them to the separation.

We hold these truths to be self-evident, that all men are created equal, that they are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable Rights, that among these are Life, Liberty and the pursuit of Happiness. That to secure these rights, Governments are instituted among Men, deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed,—That whenever any Form of Government becomes destructive of these ends, it is the Right of the People to alter or to abolish it, and to institute new Government, laying its foundation on such principles and organizing its powers in such form, as to them shall seem most likely to effect their Safety and Happiness. Prudence, indeed, will dictate that Governments long established should not be changed for light and transient causes ; and accordingly all experience hath shewn, that mankind are more disposed to suffer, while evils are sufferable, than to right themselves by abolishing the forms to which they are accustomed. But when a long train of abuses and usurpations, pursuing invariably the same Object evinces a design to reduce them under absolute Despotism, it is their right, it is their duty, to throw off such Government, and to provide new Guards for their future security. Such has been the patient sufferance of these Colonies ; and such is now the necessity which constrains them to alter their former Systems of Government. The history of the present King of Great Britain is a history of repeated injuries and usurpations, all having in direct object the establishment of an absolute Tyranny over these States. To prove this, let Facts be submitted to a candid world.

He has combined with others to subject us to a jurisdiction foreign to our constitution, and unacknowledged by our laws ; giving his Assent to their Acts of pretended Legislation :

We, therefore, the Representatives of the united States of America, in General Congress, Assembled, appealing to the Supreme Judge of the world for the rectitude of our intentions, do, in the Name, and by Authority of the good People of these Colonies, solemnly publish and declare, That these United Colonies are, and of Right ought to be, Free and Independent States ; that they are Absolved from all Allegiance to the British Crown, and that all political connection between them and the State of Great Britain, is and ought to be totally dissolved ; and that as free and independent States, they have full Power to levy War, conclude Peace, contract Alliances, establish Commerce, and to do all other Acts and Things which independent States may of right do. And, for the support of this Declaration, with a firm reliance on the protection of divine Providence, we mutually pledge to each other, our Lives, our Fortunes, and our sacred Honor.

§ 47 i. Significant Extracts from the Articles of Confederation.

ARTICLE I. The stile of this confederacy shall be "THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA."

ARTICLE II. Each state retains its sovereignty, freedom and independence, and every Power, Jurisdiction and right, which is not by this confederation expressly delegated to the United States, in Congress assembled.

ARTICLE III. The said states hereby severally enter into a firm league of friendship with each other, for their common defence, the security of their Liberties, and their mutual and general welfare. . . .

ARTICLE VI. No two or more states shall enter into any treaty, confederation or alliance whatever between them, without the consent of the united states in congress assembled, specifying accurately the purpose for which the same is to be entered into, and how long it shall continue.

No state shall lay any imposts or duties, which may interfere with any stipulations in treaties, entered into by the united states in congress assembled, with any king, prince or state, in pursuance of any treaties already proposed by congress, to the courts of France and Spain.

ARTICLE IX. . . . The united states in congress assembled shall never engage in a war, nor grant letters of marque and reprisal in time of peace, nor enter into any treaties or alliances, nor coin money, nor regulate the value thereof, nor ascertain the sums and expenses necessary for the defence and welfare of the united states, or any of them, nor emit bills, nor borrow money on the credit of the united states, nor appropriate money, nor agree upon the number of vessels of war, to be built or purchased, or the number of land or sea forces to be raised, nor appoint a commander in chief of the army or navy, unless nine states assent to the same: nor shall a question on any other point, except for adjourning from day to day be determined, unless by the votes of a majority of the united states in congress assembled.

ARTICLE XIII. Every state shall abide by the determinations of the united states in congress assembled, on all questions which by this confederation are submitted to them. AND the Articles of this confederation shall be inviolably observed by every state, and the union shall be perpetual ; nor shall any alteration at any time hereafter be made in any of them ; unless such alteration be agreed to in a congress of the united states, and be afterwards confirmed by the legislatures of every state.

§ 47 j. Significant Extracts from the Constitution of the United States.

ARTICLE I. SECTION 8. The Congress shall have Power

[§ 1.] To lay and collect Taxes, Duties, Imposts and Excises, to pay the Debts and provide for the common Defence and general Welfare of the United States ; but all Duties, Imposts and Excises shall be uniform throughout the United States ;

[§ 2.] To borrow Money on the credit of the United States ;

[§ 3.] To regulate Commerce with foreign Nations, and among the several States, and with the Indian Tribes ;

[§ 4.] To establish an uniform Rule of Naturalization, and uniform Laws on the subject of Bankruptcies throughout the United States ;

[§ 5.] To coin Money, regulate the Value thereof, and of foreign Coin, and fix the Standard of Weights and Measures ;

[§ 6.] To provide for the Punishment of counterfeiting the Securities and current Coin of the United States ;

[§ 7.] To establish Post Offices and post Roads ;

[§ 8.] To promote the Progress of Science and useful Arts, by securing for limited Times to Authors and Inventors the exclusive Right to their respective Writings and Discoveries ;

[§ 9.] To constitute Tribunals inferior to the supreme Court ;

[§ 10.] To define and punish Piracies and Felonies committed on the high Seas, and Offences against the Law of Nations ;

[§ 11.] To declare War, grant Letters of Marque and Reprisal, and make Rules concerning Captures on Land and Water ;

[§ 12.] To raise and support Armies, but no Appropriation of Money to that Use shall be for a longer term than two Years ;

[§ 13.] To provide and maintain a Navy ;

[§ 14.] To make Rules for the Government and Regulation of the land and naval Forces ;

[§ 15.] To provide for calling forth the Militia to execute the Laws of the Union, suppress Insurrections and repel Invasions ;

[§ 16.] To provide for organizing, arming and disciplining, the Militia, and for governing such Part of them as may be employed in the Service of the United States, reserving to the States respectively, the Appointment of the Officers, and the Authority of training the Militia according to the Discipline prescribed by Congress ;

[§ 17.] To exercise exclusive Legislation in all Cases whatsoever, over such District (not exceeding ten Miles square) as may, by Cession of particular States, and the Acceptance of Congress, become the Seat of the Government of the United States, and to exercise like Authority over all Places purchased by the Consent of the Legislature of the State in which the same shall be, for the Erection of Forts, Magazines, Arsenals, dock-Yards, and other needful Buildings ; — And [§ 18.] To make all Laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying into Execution the foregoing Powers, and all other Powers vested by this Constitution in the Government of the United States, or in any Department or Officer thereof.

ARTICLE I. SECTION 9. [§ 2.] The Privilege of the Writ of Habeas Corpus shall not be suspended, unless when in Cases of Rebellion or Invasion the public Safety may require it.

[§ 3.] No Bill of Attainder or ex post facto Law shall be passed.

[§ 4.] No Capitation, or other direct, Tax shall be laid, unless in Proportion to the Census or Enumeration herein before directed to be taken.

[§ 5.] No Tax or Duty shall be laid on Articles exported from any State.

[§ 6.] No Preference shall be given by any Regulation of Commerce or Revenue to the Ports of one State over those of another : nor shall Vessels bound to, or from, one State, be obliged to enter, clear, or pay Duties in another.

ARTICLE II. SECTION 10. [§ 1.] No State shall enter into any Treaty, Alliance, or Confederation ; grant Letters of Marque and Reprisal ; coin Money ; emit Bills of Credit ; make any Thing but gold and silver Coin a Tender in Payment of Debts ; pass any Bill of Attainder, ex post facto Law, or Law impairing the Obligation of Contracts, or grant any Title of Nobility.

[§ 2.] No State shall, without the Consent of the Congress, lay any Imposts or Duties on Imports or Exports, except what may be absolutely necessary for executing its inspection Laws : and the net Produce of all Duties and Imposts, laid by any State on Imports or Exports, shall be for the Use of the Treasury of the United States ; and all such Laws shall be subject to the Revision and Controul of the Congress.

[§ 3.] No State shall, without the Consent of Congress, lay any Duty of Tonnage, keep Troops, or Ships of War in time of Peace, enter into any Agreement or Compact with another State, or with a foreign Power, or engage in War, unless actually invaded, or in such imminent Danger as will not admit of delay.

ARTICLE III. SECTION 2. [§ 1.] The judicial Power shall extend to all Cases, in Law and Equity, arising under this Constitution, the Laws of the United States, and Treaties made, or which shall be made, under their Authority ;— to all Cases affecting Ambassadors, other public Ministers, and Consuls :— to all Cases of admiralty and maritime Jurisdiction ; to Controversies to which the United States shall be a Party ;— to Controversies between two or more States ;— between a State and Citizens of another State ;— between Citizens of different States, — between Citizens of the same State claiming Lands under Grants of different States, and between a State, or the Citizens thereof, and foreign States, Citizens or Subjects.

ARTICLE III. SECTION 3. [§ 1.] Treason against the United States, shall consist only in levying War against them, or in adhering to their Enemies, giving them Aid and Comfort. No Person shall be convicted of Treason unless on the Testimony of two Witnesses to the same overt Act, or on Confession in open Court.

ARTICLE VI. [§ 2.] This Constitution, and the Laws of the United States which shall be made in Pursuance thereof ; and all Treaties made, or which shall be made, under the Authority of the United States, shall be the supreme Law of the Land ; and the Judges in every State shall be bound thereby, any Thing in the Constitution or Laws of any State to the Contrary notwithstanding.

AMENDMENTS.—ARTICLE IX. The enumeration in the Constitution, of certain rights, shall not be construed to deny or disparage others retained by the people.

AMENDMENTS.—ARTICLE X. The powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution, nor prohibited by it to the States, are reserved to the States respectively, or to the people.

AMENDMENTS. ARTICLE XIII. SECTION I. Neither slavery nor involuntary servitude, except as a punishment for crime whereof the party shall have been duly convicted, shall exist within the United States, or any place subject to their jurisdiction.

AMENDMENTS.—ARTICLE XIV. SECTION I. All persons born or naturalized in the United States, and subject to the jurisdiction thereof, are citizens of the United States and of the State wherein they reside. No State shall make or enforce any law, which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States ; nor shall any State deprive any person of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law ; nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws.

AMENDMENTS.—ARTICLE XV. SECTION I. The right of citizens of the United States to vote shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or by any State on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude.

§ 48. Historical Geography.

In a previous section (§ 21) have been described the sources and authorities in American historical geography. Without an adequate knowledge of the physical and historical geography of the United States, of the natural "lay of the land," and the process of subdivision by artificial lines, the historical student is all at sea. For historical purposes the river systems and drainage basins are the proper basis of geographical study. By the phenomena of erosion, which are not too difficult for grammar and even primary schools, are to be explained most of the natural highways which lead from the sea up into the Appalachian range, and thence down the westward slope; and especially the position and interrelation of the St. Lawrence and Mississippi basins. By the tides and wave action are to be explained the harbors which determined the site of colonies, and the growth of great cities. Most of the colonial wars had their theatre in and about the passes from the seaboard to Canada, or on the coast. The Revolutionary War and the Civil War are also to be understood only by reference to the topography of the country in which they were fought. The falls in the principal rivers have become the site of manufacturing towns, or the limit of navigation. Chicago and New York, St. Paul and Minneapolis, Richmond and Norfolk, mark the head and foot of great water communications. From the earliest study of geography the features of the continent should be treated as having a connection with the settlement of the country, and with political events.

To understand a map requires a training; to the child's mind it is only a picture at first, — or rather a confused set of lines. Map-drawing and map-making help to teach the pupil to look on a map as representing a surface; but it takes a long time to learn to read the vertical element, even on the best maps. Children should early be accustomed to think of the maps as representing an uneven surface, like that of the surrounding country, or — if be flat region — like the little plateaus and channels made by rain. Clay modeling is an efficient aid to this part of a child's education.

Upon the knowledge of physical geography may be based a study of the development of political geography. Every child who studies American history at all ought to have some notion of the successive geographical status of the country. Unfortunately, there exists no satisfactory set of historical wall-maps. MacCoun's Charts are too small for a large schoolroom, and are not entirely accurate. Much may be done, however, in the way of making a set of maps. A large outline, or better, a relief map, may be painted on a movable blackboard. By using colored crayons it is easy in a few minutes to present upon it any desired general map, on a scale large enough to be seen at a distance of forty feet. Where a larger scale is desired, or the field is out of the limits of the blackboard, sketches may be made on the blackboard, or permanent maps on thick paper. The large wall outline maps, issued by several firms, will here be useful; and it is much simpler than it seems to draw rough maps on a large scale; even those who are not draughtsmen will find no difficulty. A roll of strong manilla paper, a few colored crayons, or, better still, water-colors, a yardstick, and a small map on which rectangles may be lightly ruled, are all the materials necessary.

The first use of the maps is to illustrate the territorial development of the country, by bringing before the eye the successive cessions and purchases. At the same time, the perplexing boundary controversies may be made clear. The close connection between annexations and the inner political history of the country is often brought out in startling relief when presented to the eye. Next comes the internal development of the country. Successive maps, dated, say, ten years apart, may show the extent of settlement, and the formation of territories and states. Even political affairs may sometimes be strikingly mapped out; thus, a series of maps showing the distribution of the presidential vote in each succeeding election will forever fix in the mind the slow growth of sectional parties. Special maps may be used for a variety of purposes. The theatre of wars and campaigns, detailed boundary controversies, proposed sites for the national capital, schemes of internal improvements,—these and many like subjects may be made to appeal to the eye.

Besides the wall-maps every child should have at constant command a set of small maps or an historical atlas; and should be encouraged to follow every lesson, map in hand. Sites should be learned, not with reference to a particular river or body of water only, but with some reason for that spot having been chosen. For instance, Cincinnati owes its growth to the existence of a little area of flat land between the hills and the river; and Cleveland lies at the mouth of a river making the only natural harbor on that part of Lake Erie.

In developing the political geography of the United States much use may be made of local geography, especially in the older states. Every child should know all the territorial changes which have befallen his own state, and especially his own town. A citizen of New York, for instance, ought to be aware that he lives in that part of the continent claimed by England in virtue of John Cabot's voyage; that the town was originally settled by the Dutch following on Hudson's voyage of 1609; that it was included in the territory granted by the English king to the Council for New England in 1620; was conquered from the Dutch in 1664, and was granted to James Duke of York and Albany.

In learning these data the student cannot help noticing that America was first divided among Christian nations; that then the northern portion was subdivided into colonies, with overlapping and conflicting claims.

One of the easiest ways of teaching geography is to use desk outline maps, filling them in as the subject progresses. A series of such maps will be a little historical atlas, and the making of them is an exercise in geometry as well as in geography. For college courses historical geography should never be relaxed; the more detailed and special a course, the more reason for treating the geography carefully, and making it underlie the whole body of instruction.

§ 49. Illustrative Methods.

Much criticism has been passed upon recent reformed school programmes because they include no distinct instruction in æsthetics.

Drawing, however, is a usual subject of study, and should be so taught as to cultivate a love of beautiful forms ; and history is the natural medium for instruction in art as a part of a nation's life. The first step is to make the schoolroom attractive with busts and portraits of great men, and other suggestive objects. One may follow the example of a teacher in Brown University, and make a kind of wainscot of portraits for the lecture room. Or, like an excellent academy in Massachusetts, the room may be adorned with busts of Greek gods and historical pictures. To such a cheerful collection, children, students, parents, and public-spirited people interested in the school will often contribute ; and something may perhaps be had from school funds. Where means are scanty there are still excellent portraits cut from illustrated weeklies or old magazines, and arranged in scrap books or on the walls. Any real picture of a person or place or scene, well executed, has a value ; imaginary scenes are much less satisfactory. It is to be hoped that series of lantern slides of historical value may be sometime introduced, so as to allow the use of the magic lantern. Wherever possible, by maps, charts, or pictures, the eye ought to be associated with the ear in historical teaching.

Historical excursions, common in Germany, are little practised in this country, although in all the older states there are places of great national interest. If there be no famous hall or tree or house within reach, there are at least the local political deliberative bodies,—town meetings or councils, aldermen or legislatures or courts, which are to history what chemical works are to chemistry, or steel works to manual training,—a practical illustration of the study. Wherever there is a museum it should be visited, if it have in it something more than mere curiosities.

Class discussions have already been considered (§ 49) ; many schools have regular debating clubs, in which historic questions may be threshed out as they come along in the study. Home reading (§ 13), lectures by people from outside the school, compositions and themes on subjects from American history (§ 66),—these and all like methods should come in to make the study more interesting.

§ 50. Debates.

One of the most suggestive of class exercises is to organize the class into a debating society, or to induce the regular debating societies to take up questions which arise in historical study. This method very closely connects itself with the practice and needs of everyday life: all children discuss with each other, state arguments, and try to convince, and must do it all their lives.

The usual method is to appoint one, two, or more persons as principal disputants on each side, and then to let others come in with less formal speeches. It is well to have a member of the class preside; and he should be instructed to enforce rigorously the limits of time, and to make the debate move briskly. But debates as a class exercise should be as free as possible from the machinery of parliamentary law, — points of order, discussion of technicalities, and the like.

It adds much to the directness of a debate if the principal disputants in advance reduce their arguments to the form of a brief, in which the main points are stated in their logical order, with subsidiary points arranged under each; and with references to authorities, wherever possible. Such briefs may be placed on the blackboard, or reproduced by cyclostyle.

Every such debate ought to be criticised by the teacher, at the end of the exercise, in the presence of the class. Each of the speakers should have brief notice, including praise as well as blame, and calling attention to the principal faults of each, both in delivery and in matter. Errors, inaccuracies, and misstatements should be scored, and children should be taught to consider how to make their arguments pointed and convincing.

American history furnishes many debatable questions, — on the actions and motives of public men, such as Aaron Burr; on great measures, such as the Kansas-Nebraska act; and on questions of public policy, such as woman suffrage.

In some of the universities debate has been organized into regular courses, counting toward the degree, and carried out with briefs printed in the college papers, before each debate. Instructors in elocution and in history and economics criticise the participants.¹

§ 51. Reports of Pupils.

Some famous schools find it possible to enliven their exercises by giving the pupils a part. This may be simply the assignment to each of a general subject from which he shall be prepared to make a contribution to the discussion whenever that subject has application (§ 46); or the best of the written reports may be called for, and perhaps a sufficient number combined to fill the hour. In either case caution is necessary: all the pupils must understand that the criticisms of a fellow-pupil are those of an immature person who has only a small amount of information: that his abstracts are subject to the faults of one little accustomed to precise use of language; and that quotations, carefully made, carry only the authority of the source from which they are drawn. There is no danger, if pains be taken to teach pupils to discriminate between different classes of writers — the contemporary, the careful secondary writer, and the slipshod compiler; or between the prejudiced enemy, the blind friend, and the later impartial biographer. One of the main purposes of good teaching is to give to every pupil such a part in the work that neglect is at once apparent; such a method as has been suggested leads to a feeling of responsibility, both for accurate work and for prompt and skillful performance.

§ 52. Student Lectures.

In colleges and universities it is possible to make a broader use of the same principle. In coöperative classes students do most of the work, and they often are able to bring to the study of an assigned topic an amount of time and thought which no instructor could devote to each subject if he worked it out by himself. Of course much of this time is wasted, and oftentimes the results are disappointing. Occasionally a good seminary student can conduct an exercise in a large course to advantage. The difficulty in carrying on a systematic course of successive lectures by students, even the ablest, is that none of them has in mind the dimensions and relations of the whole subject; the lectures are apt to take the form of a lyceum course — each interesting, but none necessary to the understanding of any other. That student lectures may be effective in certain limited fields of historical study seems established by the result of a course on the History of Political Theories, with especial reference to the origin of American Institutions, which has for some years been conducted on these lines in connection with the Graduate School of Harvard University. It will be conceded that the circumstances under which this course has been given are peculiarly fortunate. It has been possible to admit to it mature men only, who, for the most part, were well acquainted with the course of American history, possessed some knowledge of English history, and had studied general history. Furthermore, it has frequently happened that one or more of the members of the course had already studied the general topic with a former instructor in some other institution. The instructor has usually delivered from twenty to thirty lectures at the beginning of the year on the origin of American institutions, — setting forth in detail the various theories on the subject, and tracing the history of several most important institutions or ideas; and on the underlying causes of the American Revolution, — elucidating the theories underlying the American system of government and calling attention to the historical origin of those theories first put to a practical test by the founders of the American Republic. Meantime some great political writer has been assigned to each student — men like Locke, Hobbes, Rousseau, Jefferson. The student is thus given ample time to study the life and career of his author, to discover the method of his training, the circumstances under which the book was written, and the previous writers who influenced him. He also makes a thorough study of the works themselves so far as they bear on the subject in hand and expounds them to the class. The students have always taken a great interest in each other's work and have entered actively into the discussion. Free scope is given to each student. It is understood that he must (1) cover his subject to the satisfaction of the instructor, as a large portion of whatever credit is given for the course is based on the impression made on the instructor by the student in his lectures on his selected theme ; (2) he must be prepared to defend the successive steps in his argument, the points in his narrative, or the interpretation of his author, against the criticisms of his fellow students as well as of the instructor ; and (3) he must not weary his audience. The students are obliged to take notes of all the lectures, to read the books and topics studied, and to pass an examination on the whole work of the course. With a small class of advanced mature students this scheme has worked well. The training in the elucidation of difficult subjects to the satisfaction of a critical audience, the rubbing against earnest men from many universities in all parts of the country, is of great benefit to the student. The disadvantages of the method are that it takes about as much of the instructor's time in preparation as it would if he himself lectured ; the students frequently waste the time of the class in discussing irrelevant matter and do not lecture so effectively as a more experienced person could ; and finally it is a method to be adopted with great caution, as it is certain to fail with a class of more than twenty students, or with a small class of persons of very different grades of intelligence or attainment.

§ 53. Seminars.

The term "seminary method," and perhaps the thing itself, has been much abused in the United States. In Germany it has a perfectly distinct meaning : there it is a system of instruction of the most advanced students, in which the work is entirely original research, the necessary technical preparation for such work, and the examination and comparison of results. In that sense the word is employed also in the score of advanced institutions in the United States which have the three essential elements of the system — large libraries, trained instructors, and a body of advanced students. "Original work" is not necessarily seminary work : nor is a coöperative class necessarily a seminary. The system is in-applicable in most colleges. What is sometimes called "the seminary method" in secondary schools is really nothing but the use of sources, under competent direction; and combination of the results on some system likely to arouse interest and aid other members of the class. The aim of the seminary student is to exhaust his subject, to examine all the literature bearing on it, to say the last word: and the aim in secondary or grammar schools must be to get as much as possible out of a very limited range of material. It is the difference between the comprehensive work of Mr. Gardner on the English Commonwealth, and a magazine article on the execution of Charles I. So far as methods of research are applicable in schools, they will be considered below (§§ 67-72).

In the true seminary there are two systems in use. The first is to assign to students topics generally unrelated; and, as each student brings his work to a point, to let him occupy the hour of class exercises. The other way is to assign a series of related topics which, with an occasional lecture from the instructor, will make up a systematic and consecutive course. Each of these methods has its advantages: the former consults individual preference, and allows greater variety of treatment; the latter accustoms students to fit their historical timber into a given space. The two systems may be illustrated by the two following lists of topics in American history pursued in the same institution, under two different instructors, in the same year.

Taxation in the Colonies in 1760. — Slavery in the Colonies in 1760. — Education in the Colonies in 1760. — Religion in the Colonies, 1760. — Poor Law System in the Colonies, 1760. — Punishment of Crime in the Colonies. — The Colonial System.

Fox and Wisconsin River Improvements. — Reconstruction, 1865-1877. — Boston Politics. — The Census. — The Veto Power. — Workings of the Judiciary Department, 1865-1885. — The Greenback Labor Party. — Civil Government of the Southern Confederacy. — Foreign Relations of the United States, 1860-1885.

A teacher in a small college who desires to establish such a "practice course," or to use the "seminary method" under some other name, has two very practicable plans to work upon. He can — especially in the newer states — set his class to work up interesting incidents in the history of the state in which the college is situated ; or he can set them to studying the origin (so far as America is concerned) of the institutions with which he is familiar. One hundred dollars will buy Hening's Statutes at Large of Virginia, the Records of New Plymouth Colony, including those of the New England Confederation and the Laws of Plymouth ; Bradford's History ; Winthrop's Journal ; and the Massachusetts Colony Records (§ 29). With this material at his command an instructor will find an abundance of interesting topics for his students to study : the origin of representative systems, and the various questions connected therewith, land systems and local institutions — town, county, parish, etc. Of course this material will not prepare one to say a new word on any topic ; but it will enable a teacher to train a class in methods of original research.

VI. READING.

§ 54. Necessity of Reading.

CLASS-ROOM work of every kind depends upon the preparation and energy of the teacher. The reaction by the pupils is only to be had if they know something and think about it ; and for history the source of knowledge is chiefly reading. Study of a text-book has its advantages (§ 18), but it is not necessarily a study of history. From the youngest classes to the most advanced graduate courses reading is essential.

We are bidden to "beware of the man of one book" ; reading must be not only abundant, it must also be varied. Of course much that thus goes into the mind will not be retained : the endless detail of history easily slips away. Yet every book leaves a certain impression, though the source of that impression be forgotten ; and from much reading results a residuum of fact and conclusion which lasts a long time, and perhaps a lifetime. Sufficiently mature students may safely be turned loose in a well-chosen library, and told to browse : for they are sure to get something good. For young pupils there must be some selection indicated, but there ought always to be alternatives, so that no one need feel shut in to one writer, who is supposed to speak the final word ; and where large classes use one reference library some suggestions must be made so as to relieve the pressure on the books, and lists of selected readings are useful. For detailed courses of lectures students will find advantageous sets of more elaborate references, arranged by topics in the order of the lectures. These three systems — consecutive reading according to the student's judgment, general readings of selected passages on general subjects, and topical readings on special subjects — will be described in the following sections.

§ 55. Consecutive Reading.

For advanced students, who wish to get a view of the literature of the subject, and to compare diverging views, the best method is to take the books that seem from inspection most promising, and to read one after the other, making such comparisons as suggest themselves, and widening the field of the lectures. It is well to begin with one or two brief books so as to get a general view of the subject; and care should be taken to include contemporary material, biography, reminiscences. Sometimes a chapter of original material freshens the mind as much as a volume of a secondary work, and leaves a more distinct impression. If such work is carried on in connection with a course of lectures, topics which are treated in the lectures but have not been covered by the reading had better be prepared from the topical readings.

Even among children it is well to encourage a habit of looking into books, and selecting something that attracts for itself; but a few books well read are to them more important than a large amount of material skimmed. The advice that Sir William Petty gave to Robert Boyle to read at one time only as much as one could then assimilate is still pertinent.

§ 56. General Reading.

The subjoined lists are intended for high-school pupils and college students. Under each division is arranged a series of groups of associated books or parts of books; and any one of the later groups, together with the group numbered "1" in each case at the beginning, is considered a fair amount of reading for that period. A choice of groups is offered to allow for individual preference, and to place a larger number of books at the disposal of large classes. Pains have been taken to throw into the same division books of divergent views; in passing from period to period it is well to bring into use a set of writers not already familiar.

§ 57. Topical Reading.

In Parts II and III of this work will be found a series of topics covering, in general, the whole field of American history. These may be used in connection with courses of lectures or lessons (§ 7), or in the preparation of written work. The effort is to digest and classify the more valuable part of the immense literature of the subject. As a guide to the reading these topics may be used either before or after set lectures ; if used afterward they will serve to group the material about the lecturer's notes (§ 62). Elaborate systems of notes will naturally be so arranged as to bring the lecturer's material and the material from the topical readings together into one part of the notes.

This system, more than either of the two previously described (§§ 55, 56), makes the student acquainted with a variety of books, and is especially convenient in leading direct to the sources.

§ 58. The Conference System.

The principal obstacle to the establishment of a system of collateral reading, in connection with the proper use of a text-book, is to be found in the difficulty of properly testing such work. Written examinations give little aid here unless all the members of a class read on one narrow field, as in the method described in § 66. Where the supply of books is adequate, and the subject susceptible of division into suitable topics, this is probably the best method to adopt. When these favorable conditions do not prevail, or when a college teacher feels the need of a better acquaintance with his class, the "conference system" may be employed. This method consists in giving out references to books, or parts of books, at the beginning of each month, or other convenient unit of time. Sometimes all students are required to read in the designated books on one topic, with an option as to other topics; more often, reading on several topics is required; but there is almost always a considerable choice given both as to topics and books. The amount of reading required is stated at so many hundred pages—an amount which the teacher may regard as a reasonable requirement in addition to the study of the text-books, map-making exercises, and work in the class-room. The list of "General Readings" given in § 56 fits in well with this method.

After the students have had a chance to make a substantial beginning in this reading, appointments for conferences are made at only a few hours' notice. At these conferences each student is alone with the instructor or assistant for fifteen minutes,—a period sufficiently long to enable a practised questioner to assess with some degree of accuracy a student's intelligence, power of application, and diligence. There is also time to help the well-meaning though plodding student, or to give an unpleasant five minutes to the lazy or negligent pupil. The instructor may set a student to a certain specified task to be performed within certain hours, and in this way, by special drill, train a well-meaning student to overcome his lack of application or slovenly habits of thinking or reading,—these being the besetting sins of our American youth at the present time. The instructor should keep a careful record of these conferences, to which he can at once turn and refresh his memory as to the needs and shortcomings of successive students at later meetings. The number and frequency of these conferences can be apportioned according to the student's needs; the bright, hard-working pupil requires slight assistance, and may be left to work out his own salvation; and, on the other hand, the young person of dormant mind and no habits of work can be held rigidly to account. The method requires a good deal of the instructor's time, but not more than a properly conducted system of written work demands; and the personal contact with intelligent, and sometimes aggressive, young persons, is much more invigorating than the perusal of large masses of written examination papers, essays, weekly papers, special reports, etc.

§ 59. How to use Books.

Many persons who have read widely have little notion how to go to work to find a book on a given subject, or how to reach a specific point within a book when found. As has been already suggested in the paragraph on the use of libraries (§ 16), the first thing is to learn how to use catalogues. Some libraries print separate parts for the authors and subjects; others, like the Boston Athenæum and the Cleveland Public Library, have but one alphabet, in which appear both authors and topics. The approved method is to break the general subjects up into small topics, and to distribute these in their alphabetical place, with numerous cross-references.

In noting the title of a book for which search is to be made, the author's full name, if obtainable, should be set down; then a sufficient extract from the title to identify the book; and then it is usual to add the place of publication (sometimes the publisher) and the date. These particulars all add to the probability that the right book and the right edition will be found. Sometimes the necessary particulars are not stated in the catalogues examined; but are obtainable from some other printed catalogue. The title on the outside of the book, — "binder's title," — is not taken into account in bibliographical work.

Having secured the book, the next step is to get at its contents. The titlepage is often so descriptive as to tell at a reading whether anything on the specified topic is to be found within. The preface is, or should be, a guide to the author's purpose and point of view. A good table of contents opens up the work at once; and a single index of persons and subjects, with brief intimations of the particular thing to be found at a particular page, is like punctuality, "the politeness of kings." If contents and index are both defective, there may be no resource but to turn the leaves, and in such a case rapid skimming is advisable.

In making notes upon books and writing down references it should be remembered that there is no other proper form of reference than the name of the author, with the significant part of the titlepage title of the book, volume, and page or section — sometimes chapters. Any briefer labor-saving form will return to plague the user; and general references to back up specific points are more than useless, — they are offensive. A little care taken while the book is in the hands may save time, trouble, and vexation.

If the book is not likely to come into the hands again it is well to take full notes, including any quotations that may be needed. If the book is common, or can be had at any time, it will often serve the investigator's purpose to make skeleton notes with references, to be filled out later. Whenever a quotation is made it should be carefully protected by quotation-marks; it should be literal, so far as it goes, in punctuation, spelling, capitalization, and italicizing; every addition of the note-taker should be included in brackets; and omissions should be denoted by ellipses. Less careful methods may cause a confusion of original and quoted matter, or may result in misrepresentation.

§ 60. Talks by Teachers.

In school work the lesson must be directed, enlarged, and enforced by the teacher. Here his superior knowledge and ability to group material, and his power of clear statement, may come in to supplement the text-books. If recitations are to be more than repetition, however (§ 39), the teacher's part must not be a mere "pour in" of additional facts. To the old difficulty that teachers talked too little to their pupils in history, may succeed an over amount of talk, in which the whole matter is arranged and subdivided so that the pupil has nothing to do but to open his mouth and swallow the lumps of wisdom. Talk must not take the place of quick, sharp question and answer, or of the thought-provoking inquiry as to the causes and effects of the events passing under review.

The teacher may often describe places or scenes to which there is allusion in the text, may bring in parallels from other fields of history, may add the illustrations and incidents which give life to the story and cause it to be remembered. He should not often take up the whole time with information or comment. The object of the teacher is always to teach pupils to think about what they read or hear, rather than to force upon them the passive reception of historical matter. In general, lecture methods are out of place in lower grades, and admissible rarely in secondary schools. The "talk" should be occasional, pointed, and a clear addition to other available material.

§ 61. Formal Lectures.

In college work the lecture has an important place, though always in connection with reading and written work. In many historical fields the material is little organized, and good general books are few. In such cases—especially in advanced courses—a set of carefully prepared lectures may be the only means of clearing up the subject. The reading in such cases is intended to fill out the details, and to complete the view of important phases—though even here a good general book serves to keep the connection of the parts of the subject in mind.

Where there is already a body of available literature on a subject, the lecturer hesitates to repeat the outline facts which appear in common books; he likes to throw upon his hearers the responsibility of reading the narrative for themselves; the lectures then serve to bring out the principles, to show the relation between the parts of the subject, to point out causes and effects, and to elucidate motives. So far as the lectures are thrown into a connected narrative form, it will be to illustrate the course of the history, and to correlate the different books.

In the lectures, also, it is possible to use more freedom than in printed work,—to bring in the little incidents which are typical of character or manners, to accentuate evidence on a disputed point.

For instance, in lecturing on the Confederation of 1781, the lecturer may rearrange the narrative into the principal topics, — such as the formation of the Articles, finances, commerce, foreign relations, and internal difficulties; he may select the attitude of the state in which he lives as typical; he may quote passages from the two Websters, Hamilton, Madison, and Washington, to bring out the discontent of American statesmen with their own system. Short, vigorous quotations add life and point to a lecture; but long quotations should be avoided, as they destroy the confidence of a student in the lecturer — unless they are from original documents, and these should be read by the student.

Care should be taken not to talk over the heads of students, and also not to talk to them as children, unacquainted with the ordinary course of American history. Too much pains cannot be taken to bring out the essential things in a period, and to suggest the underlying conditions of the life of the people, which are the basis of history.

§ 62. Note-Taking.

Lectures of value are always so far different from the books on the same subject that the student needs to take notes. The practice trains the mind to grasp principles and to condense them into brief statement. A good note-book cements the parts of the course together, and may be useful to the student in later study, or in his own teaching. The note-book should further be so conducted as to leave space for the entry of brief abstracts from the reading. The following suggestions may prove helpful to students and to teachers who wish to put their material together in a permanent and convenient form.

1. Have a regular SYSTEM.
2. If you have worked out a system of YOUR OWN which satisfies you, do not change it.
3. SHORTHAND is not a great convenience, unless the notes are afterwards put into a form which may be read by any one.
4. A system of recognizable ABBREVIATIONS is desirable.
5. Take notes ALL THE TIME during the lecture.

6. A word-for-word reproduction of what you hear is much less valuable to you than your own CONDENSED FORM, embodying the lecturer's ideas.

7. Distinguish in your own mind the HEADS OF THE LECTURE, as it proceeds, and paragraph your notes accordingly.

8. Aim to set down the SUBSTANCE OF GENERAL STATEMENTS, in your own words, rather than to note a part of each sentence.

9. Practice getting the EXACT WORDS of significant phrases or quotations.

10. If you miss something important, ASK TO HAVE IT REPEATED.

11. If you lose a lecture, FILL UP THE BLANK immediately, from the note-book of a fellow-student.

12. After each lecture, go over your notes, and clearly INDICATE THE HEADS: (a) by catch-words in the margin; or (b) by underlining words.

13. Once a week REVIEW the notes taken since the previous review.

14. Make out a brief TABLE OF CONTENTS, as you go along, referring to pages of your note-book.

Every student should devise for himself a system of note-taking, and having once devised a satisfactory method, he should adhere to it at all hazards. The one thing which will seriously impair the usefulness of any system, how good soever it may be in other respects, is the use of a note-book with fixed leaves. Separate sheets or pieces of paper are indispensable, and only one topic should be noted on one piece of paper. The main desiderata of a good system of note-taking are, that it should be (1) self-indexing, (2) portable, (3) always available: doubtless no system fills all these requirements. Following are three methods employed by at least three well-known and successful students of American history.

I. 1. Use a note-book, or better, loose sheets of note paper ruled in three vertical columns: a narrow one next to the outer edge; about one-half of the width in a middle column; about one-third in an inner column. Let there be a broad horizontal line an inch or more from the top.

2. Enter your notes in the middle column ; dates and headings (if desired) in the outer column.
3. Do not rewrite the notes taken in class.
4. Enter abstracts or quotations from your later readings in the inner column, each opposite the passage in the notes which it is meant to illustrate.
5. Across the top of the page write a running heading in two, three, or four members, summarizing the matter on the page ; e.g., "Methods : — Lectures : — Note-Taking."
6. Begin to write on the right side of the open book and begin each distinct general head on a new leaf.
7. Each leaf being thus complete in itself may at any time be detached and used in another connection ; or others may be interleaved, without disturbing the logical connection.
8. Copy or reproduce tables, diagrams, or maps before the succeeding lecture.

II. 1. Use loose sheets of paper $3\frac{1}{2} \times 4\frac{1}{2}$ inches.

2. Write on only one side of each sheet.
3. Do not rewrite notes once taken.
4. Attach abstracts or quotations from your later reading to your first piece of paper on that topic with one of the many convenient fasteners made for the purpose, or with a common pin.
5. Across the top of the first page write a running heading.
6. Begin to write near the upper left-hand corner of the sheet.
7. Each leaf or collection of leaves, being thus complete in itself, may at any time be taken from its original place and used in another connection ; or other leaves may be introduced without disturbing the arrangement.

These pieces of paper and collections of sheets can be stood on their lower edges either in boxes or held together by rubber bands. The notes on a large number of books and on many topics occupy little space and are easily arranged and rearranged.

III. 1. Take the first piece of paper that comes to hand.

2. Make such notes on it as one desires.
3. Have some recognized mode of arrangement, — chronologically by countries or divisions of countries ; or follow the arrangement of some familiar and well-indexed book, which will thus serve as a key.

4. Arrange your notes once a week, according to this system, in large-paper envelopes or portfolios and stand them in boxes.

This method requires no special kind of paper, indexes itself, is not cumbersome, and is cheap. Its efficiency depends, however, on the skill with which the classification is made and the persistency with which it is adhered to. Whenever material can be arranged chronologically by topics this system has been found to work well. It may be added that two of the largest works on American history have been prepared on this scheme.

§ 63. Use of Notes.

A good set of notes should thus be a sort of elaborated syllabus of the course; and if it include abstracts and quotations from collateral books, it will serve always to recall to the student's mind what he has once heard, read, and pondered. But no self-respecting instructor allows the notes of his lectures alone to be sufficient to prepare for examinations, or to become in any way the sole test of diligence and knowledge. No instructor can afford to let his own words go out as the only or final utterance on a question; comparison of views and a filling out of details must be exacted by the required reading (§ 56) and written work (§§ 65-73).

§ 64. Giving out References.

To aid the reading it is a common and useful practice during the lectures to give out references, more or less specific, to the best literature on the topic under discussion. Some lecturers mention books in the course of the lecture; others put the references on the blackboard; others prepare them in cyclostyle or other multiplying process, and distribute them; others arrange them in print, and require the students to provide themselves with sets; others use some published topical outline. There is something to be said for and against each of these systems. On the one hand, too rigid an adherence to a printed outline interferes with a lecturer's proper relations and influence with his class ; on the other hand, the copying of long lists of books from the lecturer or the black-board sacrifices valuable time and oftentimes interferes with the attention of the class. Perhaps the best method is for the students to have a printed set of references at their desks to which the lecturer may refer, — stating the strong points of this author or the weak points of that writer, giving the biographical and other details which show how far an author had had exceptional opportunities to know the truth, either as a contemporaneous actor in the scenes described or through access to material since destroyed or not used by any other writer. Information of this kind adds life to a list of books and often arouses attention which might otherwise remain dormant. The lecturer should especially point out such authors as disagree with his positions, and should encourage the reading of books written from a point of view other than his own.

In whatever way the system is carried out, the references should be unmistakable, — that is, author and title should be so clearly indicated that no confusion can arise. If a part of the references are specific, to volume and pages, much more reading will be done. The indispensable habit of searching among books for a point of view to one's mind, the useful dipping into books, the acquaintance with many authors, — these advantages may be gained from the various forms of written work which will now be described.

VII. WRITTEN WORK.

§ 65. Written Reviews.

NEITHER the acquirement of facts nor the discussion of their relations is all that is required in teaching history; there must be some reaction by the pupils' minds, and written work has the advantage of training both the historical and the literary sense. The simplest form of such work is to call for a written review, without previous announcement. Each pupil is thus tested, and has the opportunity to think over what he has studied. A list of very short questions will bring out the knowledge of detail; but a better system is to set two or three general questions, from which the child may choose, and to expect him in his answer to show that he can use intelligently what has gone before.

Another variety of the exercises is to give the pupil his textbook, and to ask him from it to work out an answer to a question relating both to past and future work. Thus, when the War of 1812 is reached, pupils might be asked to state briefly all the difficulties and quarrels with Great Britain. Or, at the end of the Revolutionary War they might be asked to describe how far Washington's previous training was useful to him in later life. Any system is good if it really require a child to combine in new relations what he has learned in various ways and at various times.

§ 66. Brief Written Recitations.

Examinations will be considered below (§ 75). They stimulate the memory and may be employed so as to train the judgment. It is desirable, however, to devise some regular written exercise which will lay more stress on judgment and connection of events, and less on detached facts; and which will not call for any other preparation than that of regular daily work. Such exercises should preclude cram, and fit into the ordinary class-hours, whether recitations or lectures. Nothing better has been devised than the system of brief written answers to one or two questions especially chosen to test the judgment.

Suitable questions ought to be on some novel phase of a general subject with which the pupil is familiar. For example, after studying the Revolutionary War, pupils might be asked to explain why none of the conciliation schemes proposed by the British were adopted; after going through Jackson's administration, a suitable question would be what there was admirable in Jackson's character. In many cases a child's reasoning would be imperfect and his results crude; but one cannot begin too early to expect some thought and comparison. Children form judgments about the people among whom they live, and bring to bear upon the process their own standards of human character. They may easily be taught that history is a record of people who lived and thought very much as we do now.

In high schools the questions may take a broader range, adapted to the age of the pupils. For instance, after a study of the period from 1829 to 1861, they may be asked to select the president, or the statesman, or the general, whom they most admire, and to give reasons for their preference.

The system is especially applicable to college classes, and may be used to deduce constitutional principles. In some such classes there is a regular weekly exercise of this kind, the "paper" being always on some subject in constitutional practice which has been of importance in the previous week's work. With large classes it is desirable to give out a special reading-list in advance, such as may be found among the topics in Parts II and III. Here is an example of a set of such questions which has been actually used by a class; the division into questions for "odd and even record numbers" is intended to prevent two students who sit side by side from having the same topic; the alternation is intended simply to avoid any danger of catching a student on some particular topic which he feels incompetent to discuss — to allow a choice. The class had before this "paper" been studying the arguments of Hamilton and Jefferson upon the First National Bank of 1791.¹

¹ This system is described in detail in Albert Bushnell Hart, Revised Suggestions on the Study of the History and Government of the United States, §§ 35-70.

IMPLIED POWERS.

Odd Record Numbers. [Take either 1 or 2.]

1. May Congress constitutionally charter a life insurance company?
 2. May Congress constitutionally vote money for aid to sufferers from forest fires?

Even Record Numbers. [Take either 3 or 4.]

3. May Congress constitutionally grant money in support of state schools?
4. May Congress constitutionally vote pensions to former government clerks?

§ 67. The Topical System.

Perhaps the most fruitful method for pupils of the grammar-school age, and above, is the "topical,"—the assignment of very limited subjects on which pupils are to prepare themselves with especial care, using a variety of material. The advantages of such a system are obvious: it breaks up the servile adherence to the limited text of a single book; it trains in the use of books, and in the selection of pertinent facts out of a mass of material, it gives practice in bibliographical work, by the search for books and articles which bear on the subject in hand; it leads to the comparison of authors, the explanation of discrepancies, the weighing of authorities; it adds life and interest to the class work. The dangers of the system are simple, and it is easy to guard against them. Taken alone the method would lead to scrappy knowledge of detached episodes, but of course the good teacher will insist that every pupil go over the whole ground in one or two text-books. It might lead to an impression that it is so easy a matter to write a history, that anybody can do it; but skillful teaching will easily make the pupil understand that to go to the bottom of every question which an historian treats is the labor of years; that the selection from the material grows more difficult as the material accumulates; and that only a mind furnished with a great knowledge of the collateral history, and able to judge from imperfect and conflicting evidence, can produce something worthy of permanent form.

The methods of topical work are described in many places. It requires a library, however small; it needs careful supervision from the teacher; pupils must be warned against mere copying of extracts, or stringing together of paraphrases, and taught to analyze their subjects for themselves, and to arrange their results in systematic form. It is well to assign separate subjects for each pupil: this prevents collusion, and gives each a sense of the importance of his study. Every piece of work ought to include some reference to sources, if only to a volume of extracts. Such collections as Larned's History for Ready Reference include many extracts from originals; and in the various Leaflets are available reprints. The system is in essence like laboratory methods in botany and physics; and, like such methods, needs to be accompanied by systematic teaching. The flavor of those sources behind which human knowledge does not go, is invigorating and prolific of thought.

§ 68. Subjects for Topics.

The success of any scheme of topical study is dependent on a judicious choice of subjects: they must not be too long; they must require substantial work; they must be assigned with due reference to the available material; they must be capable of solution, for it discourages a pupil to find nothing on his subject, however much training he may get from his search.

The first and simplest kind of topical work, where there is a good library, is the bibliographical, the collection of a body of references on some subject. This gives invaluable training in the use of indexes, tables of contents, library catalogues, special indexes to periodicals or classes of literature; of cyclopædias, biographical dictionaries, and the like aids. It also fixes the habit of selecting out of a book the small portion which really bears on the subject in hand. The best subjects for such work are biographies of great men, for catalogues usually take more account of names than of matters. For instance, in studying the early history of Massachusetts or Pennsylvania, a list of books, articles, and references on John Winthrop and William Penn would be easily obtained and valuable. For large classes it is hard to get a sufficient number of prominent men, but much may be done with the second-rate characters who have at least a reference here and there, men like John Cotton, Lord Berkeley, or Clayborne.

Another excellent group of subjects is the geographical: the territorial history of a place, such as Philadelphia, or Vincennes, or St. Paul, or Mount Desert; or a map of a colony or region or state, or group of colonies or states, at any given period. Political data may also be worked out in graphic maps; such would be the distribution of votes on some question in Congress; the distribution of electoral votes; the distribution of members of Congress by parties; states having and not having prohibitory laws or woman suffrage or Australian ballot laws.

Very useful subjects, especially in the lower grades, are little biographies of public men. Such work may be done with a very few books, if no more are available, and may often have a romantic human interest. In this work children might be taught to see how one author copies from another, and thus how errors are propagated. They might also learn to distrust a Weems or an Abbott as historical authorities.

The more complete form of topical work in schools will usually be the study of episodes in history. Here the pupil must always be held down to a search for the truth, as developed by comparing conflicting accounts; and at the same time he must learn to state his results clearly, methodically, and so as to bring out the important points.

For more advanced students, a variety of subjects may be found, — such as constitutional discussions; accounts of assemblages, like the Stamp Act Congress, or the conferences at Ghent in 1814; phases of social institutions, such as the Puritan Church or the early colleges, or slavery in any one of the American colonies or of the later states of the Union. The statistics of finance, commerce, and population may be worked out in tables.

Biography may be studied by tracing the attitude of some public man on a great question throughout his life, as Madison's opinion on the tariff, or Webster's on slavery.

Throughout, the wise teacher will try to connect the topics with what may be presumed to be the interest of a particular pupil,—his local history, his family or his birthplace: a Delaware student on Swedish colonization; a Dickinson on John Dickinson; a Winslow on Plymouth.

§ 69. Composition in Historical Subjects.

Written work is not only a training in history, it may be so used as to build up a good English style. Teachers are often hard put to it to find suitable subjects for compositions on fresh topics, in fields where there is material available for something more than a rude statement of fleeting ideas. From many of the groups of subjects suggested for topical work (§ 68) may be chosen excellent composition subjects; and a requirement that the returns shall be made in good English, and shall be criticised for the style, will make the same paper serve the double purpose of historical training and training in English.

Biography lends itself readily to such treatment, provided the pupil understands that they are not to give simply a bald statement of the events of a man's life,—that they must suggest what there was about him which made him unlike other men of whom they know something, or at least what he did that was memorable.

On the striking events of history it is always possible to write something pointed. Such an episode as the expulsion of Roger Williams, or the settlement of Georgia, or the Stamp Act Congress, or the establishment of the Southern Confederacy in 1861, may be worked up even by young pupils, if they have some variety of materials; and it will furnish an agreeable relief from the ordinary hackneyed subjects. Here is also an opportunity to consider the ethical side of history,—human motive and effect,—Cotton Mather's relation with the witchcraft delusion; the American loyalists; or Webster's Seventh of March speech. One cannot expect long discussions on such topics, or elaborate character analysis; but even children may apply to historical characters the same standards as those which they habitually apply to people whom they know.

In setting questions, care should always be taken not to put them too high for children to reach, always to direct them to some point, and to be satisfied with moderate evidence of a power to rearrange the results and to state them in an original form. In many schools the teacher of history is also the teacher of composition, and can make the two subjects run parallel.

§ 70. The "Special Report" System.

Some account of topical work, drawn from experience, may be useful to other teachers. In the course on United States History at Harvard University each student works out four topics (if the set is not satisfactory, also a fifth). These are assigned about six weeks before they are due, on a blank of which the following is the heading.

U. S. HISTORY (13): — SPECIAL REPORT No.; — 1894-95.

Mr. Class Record No.

SUBJECT :

Overdue Reports received only through the Recorder.

Important references are : Please investigate the above subject according to the directions in the Revised Suggestions, §§ and report in not more than pages, before

Second Conference,.....	Grade,.....
Approved,.....	Explanations or remarks,
.....

Exact references in inside column.	Text of the report in middle column (on all pages).	Dates in outside column.
---	--	---------------------------------

The uniform blanks are a convenient means of giving out the subjects in written and unmistakable form ; the more important books may be indicated on the slips, if the teacher so choose ; they serve also as a record of the progress of each student, inasmuch as he is obliged to present himself to the person in charge of the work at least three times, and to explain what he is doing ; and they make it easier to handle and record the results. Furthermore, it is of great importance to teach pupils to state their results systematically, to arrange them well, and to make returns in a form prescribed by other people. It is the process of the drawer of briefs or abstracts of title or official reports. Another vital lesson which may best be taught in topical work is that specific references must accompany every important statement : author, brief title (from inspection of the titlepage), volume, and page or section.

The material for these "reports" is arranged in select libraries, containing secondary books and treatises ; in sets of Colonial records ; and in a set of United States Documents, Statutes, and Supreme Court Decisions, Congressional Records and the like. Students are expected to work for themselves, referring to the person in charge of the work when they can get no further, or to assure themselves that they are on the right track.

The attempt is made to connect each man's subject with his own family or local history and interests : to a student from New Orleans, studies of Louisiana history or of some phase of slavery ; to the son of a railroad president, investigations into the Interstate Commerce Act, or the history of the first railroad. In order to get at the data for such assignment, on entering the class each student is called upon to fill out one of the descriptive blanks of which a reduced copy appears below :

TO BE FILLED OUT BY THE STUDENT.

 13. Are you a candidate for honors, second year or final?
 14. Mention any persons, places, or subjects relating to the History of the United States, upon which you would like to have special reports assigned.
 - (a) Persons (especially public men connected with your own family, neighborhood, or state).
 - (b) States, towns, or cities.
 - (c) Acts of Congress or lines of legislation.
 - (d) Constitutional questions.
 - (e) Slavery questions.
 15. Enumerate all historical and other courses taken in college, including those of the present year:

The first report called for in United States History is the bibliography of a public man eminent in colonial or later history. Here is the Pennsylvania list, from which selections are first made for Pennsylvania students, and afterwards for any other students not otherwise assigned.

PENNSYLVANIA. James Buchanan, Simon Cameron, Andrew G. Curtin, Alexander J. Dallas, George M. Dallas, William G. Duane, Robert Fulton, Albert Gallatin, Stephen Girard, Andrew Gregg, David McM. Gregg, Robert C. Grier, Jared Ingersoll, Thomas McKean, George G. Meade, Thomas Mifflin, Robert Morris, Frederick A. Muhlenberg, Henry A. Muhlenberg, John P. G. Muhlenberg, David D. Porter, David R. Porter, James M. Porter, Samuel J. Randall, Benjamin Rush, John Sergeant, Arthur St. Clair, Edwin M. Stanton, Thaddeus Stevens, David Wilmot, James Wilson, William Wilkins.

The second report is a history of an Act of Congress, drawn from the records, with a brief summary of the arguments on each side and of the provisions of the statute. Here is one group of the subjects :

IMMIGRATION ACTS. Contract labor act, 1867 ; Chinese indemnity act, 1867 ; alien labor act, 1891 ; Chinese immigration act, 1884 ; contract labor act, 1887 ; Chinese indemnity act, 1887 ; Chinese exclusion act, 1888 ; Chinese registration act, 1891 ; Chinese immigration act, 1892.

The third report calls for a careful study of some very limited constitutional subject, making use of the treatises and special works on the subject, of the decisions of the Supreme Court, and of the practice of the government. A group of such subjects relating to the judiciary is given below :

May Congress create a judgeship with a limited term ?

May Congress constitutionally abolish a judgeship without pensioning the incumbent ?

May a President be impeached for incompetency ?

Can Senators of the United States be impeached ?

Does resignation remove an official from liability to impeachment ?

Is impeachment a judicial process ?

May an executive official be required by a court to perform an act forbidden by the President ?

Is a decision of the Supreme Court binding on Congress ?

Is a decision of the Supreme Court binding on the President ?

Is there a remedy for an unconstitutional decision of the Supreme Court ?

Is there any limitation on the President's power of pardon ?

May Congress by law relieve from penalties already incurred ?

The fourth report is upon some phase of the slavery question, such as abolition societies, meetings and mobs, slave life, fugitive cases, sale of slaves, and the like. Here is one set of examples :

SALE. Slaves buying their own freedom ; slaves purchased to set free ; sale of slaves ; advertisements, private sale ; sales at auction ; separation of families ; usual market value ; very high prices.

The fifth report is statistical, and requires the use of the Congressional Documents and other official publications. The kind of subjects is indicated by the annexed extract :

RECEIPTS OF THE UNITED STATES FROM THE TARIFF: on lumber; crockery and china; silks; works of art; books; hemp and flax; provisions; sugar; tea and coffee; salt; fish; eggs; woolen goods; glass; pig iron; wrought iron; iron and steel; hardware; cotton goods; lead ore; carpet wools; carpets; copper; cutlery; ready-made clothing; worsteds; scientific and optical instruments; quinine; manufactures of leather; fire arms.

Another group of reports may be a series of statements of the utterances and opinions of some public man (usually the same as the subject of the first report prepared by the student) on a public question. For instance:

The attitude of James G. Blaine on the tariff; of John C. Calhoun on public lands; of Martin Van Buren on the civil service.

Having finished this series of reports, students are expected to be at any time ready to find materials on any subject in United States history, to use the government publications, to state results clearly and methodically, and to apply constitutional principles to new problems.

These specific methods apply to advanced students, but they are of a kind suitable for secondary and lower schools. Exactness in stating the subject; care in supervising; aid where the pupil needs it; exhaustion of the material available; care; accuracy; neat form in arranging the results; punctuality in handing in the work, — these are the essentials of such work anywhere, and are attainable in all grades.

§ 71. The Essay or Thesis System.

In this system, which is used in the course in Colonial History at Harvard University, the attempt is made to combine training in historical methods of investigation with practice in writing English. Four essays are required from each student — two in the first and two in the second half-year. Frequently a student is permitted to continue a research which has taken him far into the sources, and to count it for two essays. The practice is not encouraged, however, as it is believed to be better for the beginner to become acquainted with the sources and modes of work on four different lines of research than it is for him to specialize at the outset within so limited a subject as American History. Such specialization belongs to the seminary rather than to practice in the use of historical materials.

At the beginning of the year each student fills out a blank, which is given herewith in a greatly reduced form:

HISTORY 10.

The instructor learns from the answers to these questions as to a student's surroundings and family history, and is thus enabled to assign as the subject for the First Essay some topic that will at once awaken the student's interest. At first sight it might seem to be a matter of considerable difficulty to find suitable subjects for one hundred and fifty or two hundred students. As a matter of fact it has not been difficult, as the answers of the students suggest topics. Thus a descendant of John Alden is naturally interested in investigating the story of the landing of the Pilgrims, or the authenticity of portions of Longfellow's Miles Standish. A descendant of Clayborne finds the early history of Kent Island interesting, and a South Carolinian will give a good deal of time and effort to the endeavor to discover a time when South Carolina was a free, independent, and sovereign state. An inhabitant of Ohio is always interested in mound-builders, and never tires of examining the claims of Virginia to lands northwest of the Ohio river; the Chicago student feels a keen interest in the first exploration of the southern end of Lake Michigan; the Pennsylvania German finds intercolonial migration an attractive theme; the Irishman derives a good deal of instruction from a study of the Roman Catholics in New York, Virginia, or Maryland in colonial times; the Baptist is interested in Roger Williams, the Quaker in William Penn, and the grandson of an abolitionist leader gains instruction from a study of the problem of why was negro slavery introduced into Georgia?

The subject of the Second Essay is taken from a different part of the country from that studied in preparing the First Essay. Thus the Virginian, who has studied Virginia for his first topic, learns something at first hand from the annals of Plymouth, January to June, 1621; the Bostonian finds the separation of Church and State in Virginia a useful inquiry; the Chicago student does well to study the causes of New York's commercial prosperity in 1760; and the South Carolinian finds the history of the New England Confederation, 1644-47, inspiring.

The Third Essay has to do with some constitutional topic, as for example: Was Otis's argument against the Writs of Assistance legally sound? Was the Stamp Act constitutional? What man, or body of men, exercised sovereign power in or over the thirteen colonies or states on January 1, 1777 (or any other convenient date)? When did the English colonies cease to be colonies? What was the constitutional status of a state at a particular time, as Virginia on June 15, 1776, or Vermont on January 1, 1780, etc.? Trace the history of the executive power in Massachusetts, 1630-40, or 1775-80; the origin of constitutional conventions; the formation of the first constitution of some state, as South Carolina; jury trials in Massachusetts, 1630-1700; the duties of a constable in Virginia in 1740, etc.

The subject of the Fourth Essay is drawn from the career of some historic personage, generally of the Revolutionary era; but in the case of a student who has already devoted a good deal of time to that period, the topic is selected from an earlier time. The following are a few subjects by way of example: Washington's preparation for war; Patrick Henry as a lawyer; Hutchinson's charges against Samuel Adams; Benedict Arnold's services to America; the military career of Count Rumford; Franklin as a scientific man; Jefferson as an educator; why should Pulaski have a monument at Savannah? These are a few topics selected at random from many hundreds. There are innumerable topics suited to different classes of students, as, for instance, the intending lawyer will do well to look up the subject of appeals from colonial courts to the Privy Council, the trial of Zenger, or procedure in the case of Anne Hutchinson; the student interested in economics finds the Massachusetts Land Bank, Communism at Plymouth, or the attempt to regulate wages in Massachusetts, stimulating. The conflicting evidence to be found in the reports of Revolutionary commanders furnishes many valuable subjects, as the construction of a map showing Greene's retreat across the Carolinas, marking the position of the different portions of the American and British armies each day; the advance of the British army to the Battle of Long Island; the tactics of the Battle of Brandywine, etc. Oftentimes it is well to give a student a topic that will take him away from his ordinary work. In this way a person whose ambition was to write a novel found the determination of the rights and duties of a freeman in Massachusetts in 1650 a useful exercise; and a student whose ambition was to excel in experimental chemistry found a narrative of George Rogers Clarke's Vincennes Expedition from the sources an interesting incursion into fields quite alien to his ordinary occupation.

These essays are written under the immediate supervision of an assistant, who has stated hours for conference in the library. The class is divided into sections, for essay purposes, of about twenty students each. The subjects for one section are given out at one time, and the work of all the students in any one section is due at the dates specified in advance, as follows: References, one week from the day the subject is given out; Notes, two weeks later; and the Essay in its final form one week after the notes are approved, or about four weeks from the day the subjects are assigned. The references are to be found by going to a section in this Guide, Part II. Frequently the books noted in the "Sources" under the section will be sufficient, but it more often happens that the student will be obliged to consult other parts of the Guide and the bibliographies mentioned in the section referred to. Enough information is given in the Guide to start an intelligent student well on his way. He is expected to look over the books and to tell the assistant which works he intends to use. The assistant endeavors to impress on him the necessity of consulting the original source in each case. The books mentioned under "General" in the section referred to usually contain enough information to enable one to understand the relations of his topic. Sometimes it is necessary to consult the references under "Special," and sometimes the assistant or the instructor is obliged to explain what is desired, and not infrequently to change the subject by limiting the inquiry to some specific part of the general topic assigned; or, on the other hand, to enlarge its scope on account of lack of materials. These preliminaries being arranged to the satisfaction of the assistant and the student, the authorities are next examined, extracts, abstracts, and digests prepared, and submitted to the assistant for his approval. He frequently suggests other sources to be looked into, and sometimes requires the work to be done anew in whole or in part. The students receive credit for this work of seeking and note-taking, the assistant bearing in mind how much aid has been given to the student. The Essay is now written in the student's own words, and based entirely on the Notes, which form an appendix, and are cited in footnotes to the Essay to justify every important statement made. These processes are precisely those on which every historical work must be built. The writing of these essays sharpens the faculties, arouses the student's interest, cultivates his judgment, and shows him how history is written. This system has been in successful operation for several years.

§ 72. Monographs.

The highest and most difficult kind of written work for students in history is the preparation of monographs, — of complete studies of some subject, with the use of all the material in print which bears upon it, and of manuscripts, if necessary. This is work to be done only in seminary courses, under the careful guidance of instructors who are specialists in their field.

Two kinds of subjects are usual in such work: an extensive study of some brief episode, or a tracing of some line of investigation through a long period of history. Of the first type a history of the Thirteenth Amendment is an example; of the second type, the veto power of the President of the United States. The former would resemble a chapter out of a large book; the latter cuts a cross-section through a long succession of events; hence, the second type is probably the most helpful to a person who is still a student.

The first step in either case is to clear the ground by making up a bibliography of the subject, including all sources and all valuable secondary authorities ; the periodical indexes should also be examined for contributions to or discussions on the subject. At the same time some general account, or accounts, should be read, in order to give some idea of the proportions and relations of the parts of the subject.

Next comes the collection of material, a long and laborious process, if the subject be — as it ought to be — important and not already worked out. Notes should be taken on loose sheets, only on one side, and with exact references as one goes along. A saving of paper means, sooner or later, a disproportionate loss of time. At this stage is the opportunity to compare, weigh, and offset evidence. (See §§ 62, 63.)

Later on the work must be put into careful written form ; well-prepared notes, arranged by topics, will now reward the investigator. The subject must be carefully subdivided and analyzed ; material must fall into its proper place, and must be properly subordinated. Exact references to precise footnotes, containing extracts from rare material, must appear at every step. It is an excellent practice to enrich the text as it is written with quotations from sources, or with occasional characteristic passages out of secondary authorities.

It is well to append the text of rare and important documents, exactly transcribed, and to throw into tabular or other form, such facts as cannot easily appear in the body of the work. If printed, an index is an indispensable part of the work.

American history is a convenient field for this kind of study, because materials are abundant, because there are many important and unworked subjects, and because the history of the United States must eventually be rewritten on the basis of carefully prepared studies of limited scope.

§ 73. Subjects for Monographs.

As an illustration of the kind of topics which in actual practice have proved interesting and worth studying may be mentioned some subjects which have been investigated in the Seminary of American History and Institutions in Harvard University: Aboriginal Man in America; Explorations of Coronado; Authority exercised by the Bishop of London in the Colonies; Origin of the Free Public-School System; various topics having to do with the general subject of the New England Town System; Development of Municipal Government in Massachusetts, New York, and other States; Slavery in New York; The Franchise in the Colonies and in the United States; The Colonial Governor, Colonial Tariffs; Colonial Immigration; Separation of Church and State; Taxation, Slavery, Education, Religion, Poor-Law Systems, Punishment of Crimes in the Colonies in 1760; North Carolina, Pennsylvania, etc., in 1775; Constitutional History of a State; The Townshend Acts; Revolutionary Embargoes; The "Old Congress"; Shays's Rebellion; Interstate Conflicts, 1783-89; Financial History of Massachusetts, 1780-87; Opposition to the Ratification of the Constitution; Interpretation of the Ordinance of 1787; Organization of the Treasury Department; History of the Constitution of New York; Status of a Citizen of the United States; Jefferson's Use of the Executive Patronage; Historical Development of the Theory of Secession; Federal Relations of a State; Anti-slavery Movements in the Northwest; Proposed Amendments to the Constitution of the United States; The Eleventh, Twelfth, Thirteenth, or Fourteenth Amendment; Reconstruction in a Southern State; Foreign Relations, 1860-65; The Acquisition of Florida; Title of the United States to Oregon; The Fisheries Question; Suppression of the African Slave-trade; The Underground Railroad; Social Life in the Confederacy; Education and Illiteracy in the South; The Consular Service; Railroad Land Grants; Fox and Wisconsin River Improvements; The Veto Power; Nominating Conventions; The Scandinavians in the Northwest; Biographies of important men, as Oglethorpe, Silas Deane, John Hancock, Roger Sherman, Rufus King, Salmon P. Chase.

VIII. TESTS.

§ 74. Class-Room Tests.

THE proper teaching of history requires that pupils should be frequently called upon to show not only that they "know the lesson," but that they know and can apply earlier lessons. Hence, informal tests must be devised. Devoting a part of each exercise to a review of the previous lesson has its advantages; but such a review is apt to be a wearisome and perfunctory exercise. It is better to keep pupils alive on all the field already traversed by compelling them to put their minds upon the whole subject.

One excellent device has been described above (§ 45) under the name of "fluents"; pupils are called upon repeatedly to give the whole narrative of some episode, or period, as nearly and as fully as they remember it. By going over and over this method pupils get saturated with the history, and carry it in their minds a long time.

An equally effective plan is that of the so-called "cards"; a few minutes of each exercise are given up to the asking of very brief questions, put sharply and quickly, and to be answered immediately and categorically. By writing the questions on a set of cards, and then mixing them, they will come out haphazard, and the answer to one will not suggest the answer to the next. (§ 45.)

Geography, of course, is tested by the constant use of wall maps and atlases, and by the construction of maps or outlines from memory. (§ 48.)

§ 75. Formal Written Tests.

Written tests are undoubtedly more searching and instructive, if properly applied. The danger in the lower schools—especially in large systems handling many children—is that examinations come to be an end instead of a means, and pupils are diverted from their studies in order to get ready for examinations. In many city schools, however, pupils are now transferred from grade to grade on the teacher's estimate of their fitness; and promotion examinations are forbidden.

So far as examinations in history are mere memory tests they have little value. But the written tests suggested in §§ 65, 66 are helpful, especially the "paper," or written application of principles to a question up to that time not considered by the pupil.

School examinations may be so contrived as to be of real assistance to historical training. The questions ought to be such as require comparison, and the use of facts acquired at different times and in different connections. For instance, instead of asking pupils who was chief general of the United States army in the Revolutionary war, and who was president in 1796, they may be asked to state what offices George Washington occupied. The old query, "Who went where with how many men?" is not an unfair satire on ordinary questions. Entrance examinations to college ought to be arranged on the same principle of calling for the selection of significant things out of the mass of detail, and the bringing out of relations between things which depend upon each other.

In colleges the written examination has greater importance because recitations in history are there antiquated; but the examination is commonly less searching than the "quiz," the "report," or the "paper." Some instructors give frequent hour examinations, others depend upon the mid-year and final examinations. In all cases examinations must come in somewhere, in order to compel the student to "take account of stock," and to show what he can do with his whole set of acquirements. Here, also, questions must test the judgment, rather than the memory; for the judgment cannot act without material, and if it be found well trained, it will be because the memory has gathered something valuable upon which the judgment stands.

§ 76. Oral Examinations.

The old-fashioned oral examinations have fallen into disuse, with the school committees solemnly ranged on the platform, and anxious children awaiting their turn. It always gave an undue advantage to the ready, off-hand pupil, and often caught pupils on some unimportant or small part of the subject. The advantage of keeping the wits sharpened, and being ready to use one's knowledge, can be gained by skillful recitations, and especially by the device known as "cards" (§ 45).

For small classes, and especially for advanced students, where there is time to go into detail, the oral examination has important uses; and it is accepted as a proper test (in part, at least) for the degree of Ph.D. The power to marshal a large body of knowledge, and to select the portion which is pertinent to an inquiry, is best tested in this way.

PART II.

TOPICS AND REFERENCES IN COLONIAL HISTORY.

IX. DISCOVERY AND LATIN COLONIZATION.

§ 77. Physiography of North America.

Summary. — The physical conformation of North America: Characteristics of the Atlantic Slope, of the Great Valleys, of the Pacific Slope; soils, mineral deposits, climate, rainfall; comparison with European lands. — Products: tobacco, Indian corn, cotton, potatoes, wheat, indigo, rice, lumber and naval stores, coal, iron, precious metals, cattle, sheep, hides and furs, etc. — Effects of this environment on men of European origin.

General. — N. S. Shaler in Winsor, America, IV, pp. i-xxx, especially pp. xx-xxx; B. A. Hinsdale, Old Northwest, 1-5; J. A. Doyle, English in America, Virginia, 5-8.

Appended to the "Preliminary Articles" in this publication will be found the "Separate Article" as to Florida. For the commissions of the Governors of West Florida, see Duane's Laws of the United States, I, 450; they are reprinted in American History Leaflets, No. 5.

THE CHARTERS: B. P. Poore, Charters and Constitutions; H. W. Preston, Documents illustrative of American History; Samuel Lucas, Charters of the Old English Colonies in America, London 1850; Old South Leaflets. Most of the important portions of the charters, from a geographical point of view, are in American History Leaflets, No. 15. The Maryland charter, in the Latin original, is in Poore's Charters. English translations are in Bacon, Laws of Maryland, and in Scharf, History of Maryland.

MAPS: FACSIMILES. Besides the facsimiles given by Winsor in his America, Mississippi Basin, and other works, and those contained in the collections of facsimiles and sketches noted below, there are several photographic reproductions of important maps on the scale of the original. There are also numerous facsimiles illustrative of particular points scattered through the descriptive works. Some of the more important of the collections are mentioned in the following list; they relate for the most part to the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries. For reproductions of later maps Winsor's Mississippi Basin is the principal storehouse. The titles of single maps and important collections illustrating particular points will be found in the later sections of this Guide, especially §§ 81-84, 87, 89, 90, 92, 131, etc.

Ekelöf and C. R. Markham, Stockholm, 1889; Sophus Ruge, Die Entwicklung der Kartographie von Amerika bis 1570 (Petermann's Mitteilungen, Ergänzungsheft, Nr. 106). This is the best compact collection of sketches for students. Published in 1892 for 8 Marks; Vicomte de Santarem, Atlas composé de Mappemondes, de Portulans, et de Cartes hydrographiques et historiques depuis le VI jusqu'au XVII Siècle, Paris, 1842-53; H. Stevens, Historical and Geographical Notes of the Early Discoveries in America, New Haven, 1869; Vivien de Saint-Martin, Histoire de la Géographie et des Découvertes géographiques, Paris, 1873-74 (Atlas of 32 maps).

MAPS, ORIGINALS: The collection in the Harvard University Library is the best in America so far as the cartography of the country as a whole is concerned; the collection in the library of the Wisconsin Historical Society is rich in maps of the interior and of the earlier history of the West.

Among the separate maps in the former collection may be mentioned: Sanson, 1656; Delisle, 1689; Coronelli, 1689; Delisle, 1700, 1703, and 1718; Jaillot, 1719; Moll, 1715, 1720; Map drawn for the Compagnie François Occident, 1701-1720; D'Anville, 1746, 1755; Bowen, 1747; Evans, 1749; Huske, 1755; Kitchin, 1755 (two copies of this map giving different boundaries); Jeffrey's D'Anville, 1755; de Rouge, 1755; Jeffrey's, 1755; Mitchell, 1755; Covens et Mortier, 1757; Evans, 1758-1771; Palairret, 1759; Jeffrey's, 1762 (?); Kitchin, 1763; Bowen, 1763; Quebec, 1763, after English and French surveys; Bell, 1772; Pownall, 1776; Pownall's D'Anville, 1777; Faden, 1777; Brion de la Tour, 1778, 1779; Maps in Fitzmaurice's Life of Shelburne, 3, 170, 294; Delisle, 1782; Wallis, 1783; Faden, 1783; Andrews, 1783; Bowles, 1783; Lothe, 1784; Janvier, 1784.

Many of the most important of the early maps are contained in the several editions of Ptolemy's Geography; in De Laet, Nieuwe Wereldt; in Montanus, Nieuwe Weereld; and in the accounts of the voyages of the Spanish, French, and English seamen, and of the early explorers, as Captain John Smith (see §§ 83-97).

Bibliography.—(See §§ 21-21 d); Thwaites, Colonies, § 1; A. B. Hart, Formation of the Union, passim. Winsor's works are in great measure a bibliography of the subject. See also his Kohl Collection of Early Maps (Harvard University Library, Bibliographical Contributions, No. 19) and his Bibliography of Ptolemy's Geography (Harvard University Library, Bibliographical Contributions, No. 18); G. § 80. The Aborigines.

Summary. — The opposing theories of Prescott and others who rely on the "Early American Chroniclers," and of Lewis H. Morgan and his followers. — The leading points in the latter theory. — Indian ideas as to landholding, inheritance, and communism. — Theories as to the origin of the Red Race of America. — Social condition of the Indians on the Atlantic seaboard of North America in 1500-1600. — Effects on the Indians of the coming of the Europeans. — Difference in the treatment of the Indian problem by the Spanish, French, and English colonists. — Reaction of these several Indian policies on the colonists of the respective nations.

General. — Higginson, Larger History, 1-26; L. H. Morgan, Montezuma's Dinner, in North American Review for 1876 (CXXII); W. H. Prescott, Conquest of Mexico, Introduction; Fiske, America, I, 21-147.

Special. — L. H. Morgan, Houses and House-life, p. 136, and following; A. F. These writers frequently refer to the earlier English writers on the theory of government, especially to John Locke, Two treatises on Civil Government, Book II; Richard Hooker, The Laws of Ecclesiastical Polity, Books I and VI; Algernon Sidney, Discourses on Government; James Harrington, The Commonwealth of Oceana; Blackstone, Commentaries; Coke, Institutes. See also Hobbes, Philosophical Rudiments concerning Government and Society and The Leviathan; Machiavelli, Discourses on the First Decade of Livy; Filmer, Patriarcha; The Works of King James; and the Agreement of the People, Instrument of Government and Petition and Advice, in S. R. Gardiner, Documents of the Puritan Revolution, and in the Old South Leaflets. A more radical form of the Agreement of the People is in Borgeaud, Democracy, and Gardiner, Great Civil War, III, Appendix; Chapter ix of the latter volume contains a detailed narrative of the formation of the Agreement and a comparison of some of its leading features with American constitutions.

The French work which produced most influence on the formation of opinion at this early period (1760-76) is Montesquieu, Esprit des Lois (numerous translations under the title of Spirit of Laws).

The Stamp Act (5 George III, Ch. xii) is in many places, among others in American History Leaflets, No. 21. The copy in Lossing's Field-Book of the Revolution, II, 672, is imperfect.

The history of this time must be studied in the biographies and writings of the leading men, see §§ 25, 32, 33, 34. In the following paragraphs the most important of these works for the student of this period are brought together:

John Adams: Life and Works (10 vols.), edited by C. F. Adams (the Life by the editor forms Vol. I, the Diary and Autobiography are in Vols. II and III). Biography by J. T. Morse, Jr., in American Statesmen Series. See also Familiar Letters of John Adams and his Wife during the Revolution and Letters of Mrs. Adams, both edited by C. F. Adams.

Samuel Adams: Life and Works (3 vols.), edited by William V. Wells. Biography by J. K. Hosmer in American Statesmen Series.

John Dickinson: Life and Letters (2 vols.), by Stillé.

Benjamin Franklin: Works (10 vols.), edited by Jared Sparks; Writings (10 vols.), edited by John Bigelow; Life and Writings (4 vols. arranged topically), edited by W. T. Franklin—a very useful edition for the student; Life of Benjamin Franklin written by himself (2 vols.), edited by John Bigelow. Biographies by J. B. McMaster in American Men of Letters Series, and by J. T. Morse, Jr., in American Statesmen Series.

Alexander Hamilton: Works (9 vols.), edited by H. C. Lodge. Biographies by J. T. Morse, Jr., (2 vols.), and by H. C. Lodge in American Statesmen Series.

Patrick Henry: Life and Speeches (3 vols.), by W. W. Henry. See also biographies by William Wirt and M. C. Tyler, the latter in American Statesmen Series.

Stephen Hopkins: Life by W. E. Foster forming Nos. 19 and 20 of Rhode Island Historical Tracts.

John Jay: Biographies by William Jay and George Pellew, the latter in American Statesmen Series.

Thomas Jefferson: Writings (10 vols.), "Congress Edition"; new edition edited by Ford (Vols. I-III cover the Revolutionary period). Biographies by Randall (3 vols.), Tucker (2 vols.), Parton, and J. T. Morse, the last in American Statesmen Series.

R. H. Lee: Life by R. H. Lee.

George Mason: Life (2 vols.), by K. M. Rowland.

James Otis: Life by Tudor.

Timothy Pickering: Life (3 vols.), by O. Pickering and C. W. Upham.

Josiah Quincy, Jr.: Life by J. Quincy.

George Washington: Writings (12 vols.), edited by Jared Sparks; also an edition (12 vols.), edited by W. C. Ford; Correspondence of the Revolution, being Letters to Washington (4 vols.), edited by Sparks. Biographies by John Marshall (4 vols.), Irving (3 vols.), Sparks (forming the first volume of his edition of the Writings), and Lodge in American Statesmen Series (2 vols.).

Biographies of less prominent persons are in Sparks, American Biography; Sanderson, Signers of the Declaration of Independence; Elizabeth F. Ellet, The Women of the American Revolution; Charles C. Jones, Jr., Biographical Sketches of the Delegates of Georgia to the Continental Congress; Thomas Wyatt, Memoirs of the Generals, Commodores . . . during the Wars of the Revolution and of 1812. The Southern Literary Messenger contains many collections of letters and other material relating to this period.

For critical estimates of some of the leading men, see Theodore Parker, Historic Americans. Mason L. Weems's biographies of Washington and Franklin, are interesting as showing the origin of many of the stories connected with these men.

A General History.

For High Schools and Colleges.

By P. V. N. MYERS, Professor of History, University of Cincinnati. 12mo. Half leather. x + 759 pages. mailing price, $1.65; for introduction, $1.50.

THIS history is believed to combine all the qualities that such a work should possess, — a philosophic eye for the great line of development of the life of the race, not diverted by mere incidents; candor in the treatment of all questions; a due sense of proportion; accuracy of scholarship; a style transparent though at the same time full of color; and the quality of teachableness.

One feature of the greatest interest and practical value is this, — the author not only brings out and keeps distinct the interrelations of things, but he notes and sets clearly before the reader what each nation has contributed to the life and advancement of the race, — and so to our present civilization. Among the methods which will specially recommend themselves to teachers is the plan of cross-references which bind the branches of the learner's acquisitions compactly and vitally.

J. W. Stearns, Professor of Pedagogy, University of Wisconsin, Madison, Wis.: Its selection of topics for treatment, its conception of the relations of parts to the whole, its grasp of what is most vital in the history of the civilized world, together with the vividness and vitality of the narrative, make it the best text-book in universal history for beginners that we are acquainted with.

A. H. Fetterolf, President Girard College, Philadelphia, Pa.: I keep it on my desk, and whenever I have a few moments unoccupied I take it up, and I never turn to a page that does not have some things that interest me.

Angie Clara Chapin, Professor of Greek, Wellesley College, Mass.: It is a marvel of condensation, retaining, however, the breadth and interest of a fuller narrative.

Shailer Mathews, Associate Professor of New Testament History, Chicago University: The statements are singularly clear and vivid; the simplicity of its style and its picturesque character fit it especially for an elementary text-book.

George C. Chase, President and Professor of Psychology and Logic, Bates College: I find it unlike other works of its kind, thoroughly readable. The author has shown a sense of proportion seldom exhibited in books devoted to general history.

Charles S. Walker, Professor of Mental and Political Science, Massachusetts Agricultural College, Amherst: He presents the facts in their relation to the art, commerce, government, and civilization of mankind so as to attract attention in the very beginning and hold it to the end.

A History of Greece.

For High Schools and Colleges. By P. V. N. MYERS, Professor of History and Political Economy in the University of Cincinnati. 12mo. Cloth. xiii + 577 pages. Illustrated. Mailing price, $1.40; for introduction, $1.25.

THIS work, although written on lines drawn by the author in a previous work, is practically a new book. It is designed for use in colleges as well as with advanced classes in high schools and seminaries.

The aim of the author has been to bring into prominence the vital and permanent elements of Greek history. Special care has been exercised not to overload the book with too many details. The import for Greek history of the recent archaeological discoveries on Greek soil has been indicated, and the development of the Athenian Constitution traced in the new light afforded by the lately found Aristotelian treatise. There are special chapters devoted to art, literature, philosophy and the social life of the ancient Greeks.

Besides a full bibliography at the end of the book, each chapter is followed by references to parallel readings, while numerous foot-notes direct the student to the original authorities. The book is illustrated with numerous cuts.

U. G. Weatherly, Professor of History, Indiana University, Bloomington, Ind.: It possesses those qualities most to be desired in a text-book on the subject—clearness, orderly arrangement, and terseness, combined with vitality.

J. L. Day, Lecturer in Classics, McGill University, Montreal: It gives me great pleasure to adopt Myers's Greece this year with my freshman class. The maps, illustrations, scope of work, and execution are excellent.

E. L. Sargent, Sub-Master of English High School, Cambridge, Mass.: For use in high schools, it seems to me that it is perhaps the best and most satisfactory.

H. C. Stancliff, Department of History, Northwestern University, Evanston, Ill.: The work possesses the excellent qualities of Professor Myers's other histories together with some valuable new features.

Geo. W. Harper, Principal of Woodward High School, Cincinnati, Ohio: I am an enthusiastic admirer of Professor Myers's histories. His new History of Greece is, if possible, a little better than any of his previous works.

Lincoln Hulley, Professor of History, Bucknell University, Lewisburg, Pa.: The analysis and arrangement, the choice of materials, and the literary workmanship are fine.

The Eastern Nations and Greece.

(Part I. of Myers's and of Myers and Allen's Ancient History.)

By P. V. N. MYERS, Professor of History, University of Cincinnati; author of Mediæval and Modern History, etc. 12mo. Cloth. ix + 369 pages. Mailing price, $1.10; for introduction, $1.00.

THIS work embraces the history of the Egyptians, Assyrio-Babylonians, Hebrews, Phœnicians, Lydians, Medes and Persians, and Greeks. About three-fifths of the space is given to Greece.

The chapters relating to the Eastern nations have been written in the light of the most recent revelations of the monuments of Egypt and Babylonia. The influence of Oriental civilization upon the later development of the Western peoples has been fully indicated. It is shown that before the East gave a religion to the West it had imparted many primary elements of art and general culture. This lends a sort of epic unity to series of events and historic developments too often regarded as fragmentary and unrelated, and invests the history of the old civilizations of the Orient with fresh interest and instruction.

In tracing the growth of Greek civilization, while the value of the germs of culture which the Greeks received from the older nations of the East is strongly insisted upon, still it is admitted that the determining factor in the wonderful Greek development was the peculiar genius of the Greek race itself.

The work is furnished with chronological summaries, colored maps, and numerous illustrations drawn from the most authentic sources. See also Myers's and Myers and Allen's Ancient History.

Arthur Latham Perry, Emeritus Prof. of Political Economy, Williams College, Mass.: I have read every word of Myers's Eastern Nations and Greece, and wish to express my sense of the great skill and elegance with which has been condensed into a single small volume all that is really most important to be known of the early nations, in such a way that the memory can easily hold it, and that the mind is satisfied at once with the facts selected and the taste exhibited in handling them.

I. T. Beckwith, Prof. of Greek, Trinity College, Hartford, Conn.: The book seems to me remarkable in its comprehensiveness, and likewise in the clearness and life with which it presents the leading facts in each great movement. I think it far more interesting and useful than any other epitome of the kind which I have seen.

Outlines of Mediæval and Modern History.

By P. V. N. MYERS, A.M., Prof. History, Univ. of Cincinnati, author of Outlines of Ancient History, and Remains of Lost Empires. 12mo. Half morocco. xii + 740 pages. With colored maps, reproduced, by permission, from Freeman's Historical Atlas. Mailing price, $1.65; for introduction, $1.50.

THIS work aims to blend in a single narrative accounts of the social, political, literary, intellectual, and religious development of the peoples of mediæval and modern times, — to give in simple outline the story of civilization since the meeting, in the fifth century of our era, of Latin and Teuton upon the soil of the Roman Empire in the West. The author's conception of History, based on the definitions of Ueberweg, that it is the unfolding of the essence of spirit, affords the key-note to the work. Its aim is to deal with the essential elements, not the accidental features, of the life of the race.

Unity and cohesion are secured by grouping facts according to the principles of historic development, and while the analysis is rigid and scientific, the narrative will be found clear, continuous, interesting, and suggestive.

W. F. Allen, late Prof. of History, University of Wisconsin: Mr. Myers's book seems to me to be a work of high excellence, and to give a remarkably clear and vivid picture of mediæval history.

E. B. Andrews, Pres. Brown University, Providence, R.I.: It seems certain to take its place as one of the most serviceable books of its kind before the school and college public.

Geo. W. Knight, Prof. of History, Ohio State University: The author seems to have gotten hold of the active principle, the leading motives and tendencies of each age; to have taken a comprehensive view of the development of man's ideas, of nations, and of governments. Then he has grouped the various events in such a way as will bring clearly to view these different phases of the world-development without ignoring what may be called the collateral events.

Frances M. Buss, Prin. N. London College for Girls, London, England: A valuable work, not too detailed, but enumerating general principles. The maps are especially valuable, and the book is sufficiently interesting to be used as a school prize. It supplies a place in the ranks of our text-books until now empty.

Brandt V. D. Dixon, President Woman's Department, Tulane University: I am using it with the best results I have ever seen in the study of the period treated.

Introduction to the Study of the Middle Ages.

From the Battle of Adrianople to the death of Charlemagne (A.D. 378-814). By EPHRAIM EMERTON, Professor of Ecclesiastical History in Harvard University. 12mo. Cloth. xviii + 268 pages. Mailing price, $1.25; for introduction, $1.12.

THIS work aims to give, in simple narrative form, an account of the settlement of the Germanic peoples on Roman soil, the gradual rise of the Frankish supremacy, the growth of the Christian Church and its expression in the monastic life and in the Roman Papacy, and finally the culmination of all in the Empire of Charlemagne.

George P. Fisher, Professor of Ecclesiastical History, Yale College: The work is the fruit of diligent investigation; it is concise, but, at the same time, lucid and interesting.

Mediæval Europe (814-1300).

By EPHRAIM EMERTON, Professor of Ecclesiastical History in Harvard University. 12mo. Cloth. xxv + 607 pages. Illustrated. Mailing price, $1.65; for introduction, $1.50.

THIS work is a continuation of the author's Introduction to the Study of the Middle Ages. Its aim is to call the attention of students to the most important political, social, and religious institutions of Continental Europe during the Middle Ages proper.

Beginning with the Empire of Charlemagne, the first topic discussed is the formation of the European States, as they were to remain during the period. The two great institutions, the Holy Roman Empire and the Roman Papacy, are then traced during the period of the later Carolingian Emperors and the rise of a true German power under the Saxon kings. Next is shown the decline of the Papacy under the control of the local Roman nobility, and its restoration by the Saxon emperors. The parallel development of the Empire under the Franconian House and of the Papacy under the influence of the Cluny Reform movement is traced to the conflict of these two powers under Henry IV and Gregory VII.

Moses Coit Tyler, Professor of American History, Cornell University: It is a treat to look into so scholarly and satisfactory a book. It is in full use here as a textbook.

The Leading Facts of English History.

By D. H. MONTGOMERY. New edition. Rewritten and enlarged, with Maps and Tables. 12mo. Cloth. viii + 445 pages. Mailing price, $1.25; for introduction, $1.12.

IN this work the important events of English History are treated with great fullness, and their relation to that of Europe and the world is carefully shown.

The text is in short paragraphs, each with a topical heading in bold type for the student's use. The headings may be made to serve the purpose of questions. By simply passing them over, the reader has a clear, continuous narrative.

The treatment of each reign is closed with a brief summary of its principal points. Likewise, at the end of each period there is a section showing the condition of the country, and its progress in Government, Religion, Military Affairs, Learning and Art, General Industry, Manners and Customs.

No pains have been spared to make the execution of the work equal to its plan. Vivid touches here and there betray the author's mastery of details. Thorough investigation has been made of all points where there was reason to doubt traditional statements.

The text is illustrated with fourteen maps, and supplemented with full genealogical and chronological tables.

Hon. E. J. Phelps, recently United States Minister to Great Britain: The author has done a much-needed work extremely well.

Professor Goldwin Smith: The book, besides being very attractive in appearance, seems to be very suitable for the purpose in view.

Elisha B. Andrews, President of Brown University: I do not remember to have seen any book before which sets forth the leading facts of English History so succinctly, and at the same time so interestingly and clearly.

A. L. Perry, Emeritus Professor of Political Economy, Williams College: I have never seen anything at all equal to it for the niche it was intended to fill.

Jas. F. Colby, Professor of Law and Political Science, Dartmouth College: Its title is a true description of its contents. Its author shows sense of proportion, and wisely gives prominence to economic facts and the development of constitutional principles.

F. B. Palmer, Principal of State Normal School, Fredonia, N.Y.: I have not examined anything that seems to me equal to it for a class in English History.

John Fiske, Professor of History, Washington University: It seems to me excellent.

The Leading Facts of French History.

By D. H. MONTGOMERY. 12mo. Cloth. vi + 321 pages, with fourteen black and colored maps, and full tables. Mailing price, $1.25; for introduction, $1.12.

THE object of this volume is to present, within a moderate compass, the most important events of the history of France, selected, arranged, and treated according to the soundest principles of historical study, and set forth in a clear and attractive narrative.

G. W. Knight, Prof. of History, Ohio State University: I do not know another book which, in any- thing like the same space, conveys for youthful students so good a notion of French events.

The Leading Facts of American History.

By D. H. MONTGOMERY. 12mo. Half morocco. xii + 365 pages, besides colored maps and full-page illustrations, with an Appendix of 67 pages. Mailing price, $1.15; for introduction, $1.00.

FEW text-books have met with such immediate recognition as this. It seems to be regarded by the best judges as, on the whole, the best school history of the United States yet published. It was written and not simply compiled. The author did not take it for granted that a history of our country must be a perfunctory work made up from previous histories and merely iterating an old set of facts, ideas, and stories. The book is a panorama of the leading events of our history, with their causes and results clearly traced. Attention has been given to all the departments of American life and activity. It describes the development of the American people. The author's broad and liberal sympathies saved him from sectarian, sectional, or partisan views. The style is full of life, and the words can all be understood by the pupils for whom the book is designed.

E. G. Bourne, Professor of History, Yale University: The matter is well selected, and the style fresh and interesting. The first chapter on the discoveries deserves especial commendation for its clear explanations of the underlying causes of voyages of the period.

The Beginner's American History.

By D. H. MONTGOMERY. 12mo. Cloth. 234 pages. Fully illustrated with new maps and pictures. Mailing price, 70 cents; for introduction, 60 cents. See page 199.

A Short Constitutional History of England.

By H. ST. CLAIR FEILDEN, late of Corpus Christi College, Oxford, Eng. Revised and in part rewritten by W. GRAY ETHERIDGE, late scholar of Keble College. 12mo. Cloth. xx + 358 pages. Mailing price, $1.35; for introduction, $1.25.

THIS is a concise, clearly written treatise which is believed to have no equal in its department. As a convenient manual of reference, teachers and students of English constitutional history will find it invaluable. It treats of the following subjects, citing Stubbs, Hallam, May and other recognized authorities: the origin, power, and limitations of the Crown, traced from the earliest period down to modern times; the rise and jurisdiction of the King's Councils, the Cabinet, and the Ministerial system; the origin and growth of Parliament, party government and legislation; the rise and decline of the Feudal system (land tenure); taxation and finance; the people; the press, and the growth of towns, the church, the army and navy. An appendix gives a summary of the more important charters and statutes and a digest of leading constitutional cases decided by the high courts and by Parliament.

Benjamin S. Terry, Professor of Mediæval and English History, University of Chicago, Chicago, Ill.: I regard it as a thoroughly good book. It is compact, well arranged, and rational in treatment. Within my knowledge it is the best presentation of English Constitutional History in so small a compass, that we have.
